1535 On the dissolution of the Monasteries the Church of St Mary came into the hands of the Crown and subsequently into the possession of the Haverfordwest Corporation.

1565 Corporation Records show Jenkin Davids and Moris Howell younger, Proctors of the Church, received from Morrys Walter £1-15-4, part of the sum raised by selling cups from the Church. The sum of £5-1-4 was raised by the sale of a chalices

1566 The Corporation accounts for that year it is stated that Lewis Harris and John Harris were collectors of the priest's wages in St. Mary's Church and that they had paid to Raffe Saviour, curate there, £8. Another entry in the same year shows that the Corporation had sold 8 chalice out of St. Mary's Church for £5 1s. 4d., and also some copes.

1613 Gwin William January 14, of Moilgrove, 'whose corpse was seized for debt due to Edmond Packer for his diett duringe the time of his imprisonment — he was buried in the north aisle before MistrEsse Scourefelde's seat on fryday, January 14, 1613.' St Mary's Haverfordwest register

1731 Edward Henry gave a paten cover and credence paten in 1765.

1836 The Church appears to have remained under the patronage of the Corporation until 30 September., 1836, when the advowson was purchased by Rev. Thomas Watts, from whom it was purchased by Rev. J. H. A Philipps of Picton Castle, Pems., about the year

No very early presentations to the vicarage of St. Mary have been found. The Church during monastic times was no doubt served by chaplains, and any record of their appointment was probably kept in the monastic registers, which are now lost or destroyed. Even after the acquisition of the advowson by the Corporation of Haverfordwest, it is impossible to be certain whether some of those who performed the services at the Church were vicars or curates; it will be seen that several persons in the list are styled lecturers, and it would appear that these lecturers preached and performed other offices, such as baptisms, burials, etc.

Church Plate of Pembrokeshire 1904 Haverfordwest (S. Mary).

The oldest piece of silver now belonging to this Church is a handsome Tankard-shaped Flagon of silver gilt with flat lid, pierced thumb-piece and whistle handle. It bears the Hall Mark of 1660, the maker's Mark being F W. Three flagons bearing this maker's Mark are found at St. Mary's, Lambeth. Height, 8 in. ; diam. of mouth, 4 in., of base, 6in. ; weight, 36 oz. On the drum is inscribed " The Gift of Edward Henry Edwards esq. to the Parish Church of S' Mary in Haverfordwest : 7th February 1731 ". Above the inscription appears the sacred monogram, cross and nails within rays. This vessel was probably made for domestic purposes, in which case we would have to assume that when presented to the Church seventy-one years later the above mentioned ornaments were added. Underneath the base is engraved "Z Read".

A large Bell-shaped Chalice with its Paten cover carrying the Hall marks of the Britannia standard for 1719, the maker's Mark being B E with mitre above for William Bellanger. The cup measures 9 in. in height ; diam. of bowl, 5 in. ; diam. of foot, 3 in. ; weight, 15 oz. 17 dwts. round the bowl is inscribed "The Parish Plate of St Marys Haverford west in Pembrokeshire South Wales ". The stem which is extremely short carries a slight knop formed of a narrow ring with fillets. The mouth of the bowl in one place is a little indented to form a slight spout as at Prendergast. The Paten cover is 6 in. in diam., 1in. in height, and weighs 8 oz. 18 dwts. The foot or handle is engraved with the same inscription as that on the chalice.

A Credence Paten, Hall-marked 1724 with maker's Mark R. - , the second letter being illegible. Inscription " The Gift of John Williams of Haverfordwest Vintner to y* Church of S" Marys in y* S*- Town who Dyed 22 May 1733 ". weight, 11 oz.

The Phillips Plate is a service of silver gilt consisting of Chalice, Paten cover and Credence Paten all inscribed " The Gift of John Phillips esq. Late Alderman of the Town of Haverfordwest to the Parish of S* Mary in the same Town 1765 ", The Hall marks indicate the year 1765, the maker's

Mark being W C as in O. E. P. at 1758. The cup is an enormous vessel in weight with cover, 32 oz. 8 dwts. On the stem is a small ring of moulding forming the rudiments of a knop. The bowl is decorated with I. H. S., cross and nails within rays. On the Paten cover there are no Hall marks. Diam., 6 in. The Credence Paten is 8 in. in diameter being decorated with the sacred monogram, cross and nails within rays ; weight, 13 oz. 2 dwts. The donor was Mayor of Haverfordwest in 1737.

Two silver mounted glass Cruets Hall-marked 1894 and 1895 respectively with maker's Mark [^]w [^] four-lobed shield,

A pair of Chalices of plated metal, each measuring 8 in. in height.

1811 St Thomas Church Fenton, Tours

On the summit of the Hill whose acclivity the principal part of the town occupies, stands the Church of St Thomas , in the midst of a spacious field for a churchyard, in my memory the noted arena for the young pugilistic combatants of the free school and the lively scene of their various games and probably devoted to the same purposes to this day. The Church, though said to have been built, according to the annals of St David's about 1225 has nothing either within or without to stamp its architecture of that age; and it is the opinion of some of our best antiquaries that the building called in the annals of St David's “novum opus majoris ecclesiae St thomae Haverfordiae” was the Church of the priory which was dedicated to St Thomas the Martyr.

An uninteresting Church much modernised comprising a Long nave with small chancel, and a tall western tower. The latter is the only portion that retains its original character and has some resemblance to others in the county, being without string-courses and buttresses to the lower part only. Below the battlements the usual corbel table of uncertain date. The belfrey window is of two lights; and to the north east end is an octagonal turret. A west porch has been added. The west door has a flat pointed arch. The window over is mutilated. On the west side is sculptured a rood. The tower has the usual stone arch within, over the lower story; and the small openings to the staircase have internally, trefoil heads. The windows in the body of the Church are all modern; the roof is coved; the chancel arch plain pointed; the altar rails enclose the whole of the chancel; the pulpit is in the centre blocking the altar, and under it is a modern font.

1885 Arch Camb

This Church has been greatly improved by the present Rector. The nave has received a north aisle, affording accommodation to one hundred additional worshippers. The 'modern' font had been replaced before Mr Hilber's incumbency, by one still more modern, near the west end of the nave; and the pulpit had been placed against the south pier of the chancel arch

1895 Nooks and Corners –Timmins

The massive tower of St Thomas 's Church, crowning the brow of an adjoining Hill forms a conspicuous feature in our general view of the town. Though much modernised, this Church contains one relic of the past that must on no account be overlooked.

Upon the pavement of the north aisle is preserved an ancient slab of limestone, whose battered surface is carved in low relief with a beautiful foliated cross, terminating in trefoils; beside the cross is an object resembling a palm branch, and closed inspection reveals, incised upon the edge of the stone, the legend F Ricard LE PAUMER GIT ICI DEU DE SAALME EIT MERCI AMEN.

According to the verdict of the antiquaries, this curious monument records a certain brother Richard the Palmer who, in days so remote as the time of Giraldus Cambrensis, journeyed as a pilgrim to Rome; or it may be joined as a recruit in the Crusade of Bishop Baldwin

Up in the tower we discover a brace of fine old bells, the larger one bearing the motto SANCTUS Gabriel ... PRO NOBIS; the smaller, or sanctus Bell 'geve thanks to god, t.w.1585'

The Church was formerly a possession of the Perrots of Haroldston, until in Queen Elizabeth's reign the Crown became, as it has ever since remained, the patron of the living.

St Thomas ' is supposed to have been, to a great extent, first rebuilt at a later date. In the report of the first visit of the Association, it is said that both Church and tower 'may be of any date, and appear to have succeeded an earlier building'

In the north aisle there is a coffin slab which may have been placed in the Church in the 13th century. It bears the name 'Richard le Pawmer' perhaps a friar, but certainly a pilgrim from the Holy Land.

1920 The Parish Church dedicated to St Thomas the martyrdom RCAM

This Church, with the exception of the tower is modern. The tower 21ft by 19ft of 13th century date consists of three storeys, the lowest is plain vaulted. There are the usual corbel table and battlements. On the west front of the second storey is a stone displaying a crucifix with two attendant figures much weathered. At the north east angle is a polygonal turret. The tower openings have been modernised.

Against the interior west wall is a broken monumental slab found under the pavement of the east end of the Church in 1853-4 (Arch Camb 1856 p282) it bears a floriated cross , above which is a much defaced monkish head in relief. The inscription reads: + Ricard; LE PAVMER; GIT; ICI;DEV;DE SAALMET EIT MERCI; +. Of 14th century date; it bears signs of interference – Visited 5th July 1920

Arch Camb

The Monumental slab found under the pavement of the eastern end of the Church of St Thomas at Haverfordwest in the course of repairs executed in 1853-4

The finders did not notice anything that would give a clue to its history, and, as is usual in these cases, the inscription does not afford much information, it only occupies one edge of the stone and is a form commonly found upon tombs of the period to which this seems to belong, viz., the 13th century.

Apparently this slab originally covered the remains of a brother of the Dominican Priory, for the letter F. unquestionably shows that it commemorates a member of some monastic order.

There is no slab exactly like this in Cutt's Sepulchral Slabs, and it is curious in several respects. The cross is of a simple, elegant, and early form; and its foot ends differently from that of any example with which we are acquainted. The egg shaped space at the upper end of the stone is all that remains of a portrait of the person commemorated. Several examples of such a representation of the defunct are extant, and figures of some of them will be found in Mr Cutt's above mentioned work.

The device by the side of the cross has supposed to represent a palm branch, and together with the name of the friar, to intimate that the deceased had made a pilgrimage to the Holy Sepulchre. This seems not to be an improbable explanation of them. We have not found a description of any similar device. In all probability the term "Le Paumer" is not a family name, but simply the designation of Brother Richard , after his return from the Holy Land – C.C.B.

The Credence Paten bears the Hall Mark of 1753, the maker's Mark being IM for Jacob Marshe ; diam. weight, 13 oz. 10 dwts. This again is ornamented with I. H. S., cross and nails within rays. Inscription " The Gift of Elizabeth Jones Widow to the Parish of St. Thomas in Haverford west 1753 ".

1811 Priory of Black Canons Fenton, Tours

Without the town on the banks of the river below the Quays a priory of Black Canons dedicated to St Mary and St Thomas the Martyr, founded and liberally endowed by Robert de Hwlfordd, first Lord of Haverfordwest, son of Richard Fitz Tancred, Castellan of Haverfordwest under the Earl of Clare. The endowment consists of several advowsons and tithes within his barony, and was confirmed by Edward III. It was valued according to Dugdale , (26 Hen 8) at £133 11s 1d and by Speede at £135 6s 1d and granted at the dissolution to Roger and Thomas Barlow.

Barlow William, who was appointed Prior by Anne Boleyn, Marquess of Pembroke, was a radical reformer who preached against the Pope and the bishops and Clergy of St Davids, and against the friars and their idolatry. Barlow became Bishop and tried, unsuccessfully, to remove the see to Carmarthen, but managed to take the Bishop's palace to Abergwili. Haverfordwest is indebted to him, however, as it was he who wrote to Thomas Cromwell in 1536 urging that "the shire town be Haverford west, in the midst of the shire (whither men may at all seasons repair) and not as hitherto Pembroke, which is not only remote, but also inconvenient."

Of this priory, if we may judge by the remains of different ruined walls now appearing scattered over a vast space of ground in every direction, and the skeleton of the Church, the whole establishment must have been very extensive, and inferior to none in Wales but Strata Florida and

Heath. The Church was a large cruciform pile, with a tower in the centre, about one hundred and sixty feet from east to west in the clear. The length of the transepts eighty eight feet, breadth of nave and chancel twenty six feet and of transepts the same. The walls five feet thick. The tower was supported by four handsome pointed arches, all down but one, whose freestone casings are stripped. There was a large window at both ends, and the chancel had three lancet windows like those of Salisbury on each side. The whole building seemed to have been highly finished and the masonry excellent, as appears by immense fragments as inseparable as if one entire stone.

Without the north transept, a few yards from the wall there was a vessel on the stocks, and a grove of masts in the river by the Quays above it. How things are altered! The monks who once immured here in solitude and prayer, and were hardly ever disturbed by the dashing of a casual oar on the river that glided by smoothly as their own lives, never thought that a dockyard would have existed within their sacred precinct, and that the river which silently washed their cloistered walls would have ever been conscious of such bustle and traffic. From any road that is travelled these ruins are hardly seen, and therefore, unless you enter the meadow they occupy, no idea can be formed of their extent.

The Priory Church was a stately structure; cruciform, with a tower rising from the intersection of the nave and the transepts. (Phillips Arch Camb 1898)

The Augustinian Priory on the banks of the Cleddau was established c. 1200 by the Community of monks who lived by the rule of St Augustine. It is likely that there would have been a Prior and twelve Canons in Haverfordwest Priory. At some stage in the 13th century Robert of Haverfordwest gave the three town churches to the Priory which then enjoyed a rich income from the tithes of these appropriated churches. The Priory would have been responsible for appointing a vicar or chaplain or one of their Canons to serve in the three churches.

1922 Royal Commission on Ancient Monuments

The ruins of a small house of the Austin Canons occupy a pleasant spot on the banks of the Cleddau, about half a mile below the town of Haverford. A Conventual establishment was founded here about the year 1200 by Robert de Haverford a knight in the train of William Marshal Earl of Pembroke (died 1219). The priory appears to have been of the ordinary type of Augustinian houses with the different buildings arranged around a small garth, the Church being placed on the north side. All the buildings have disappeared but much of the Church was standing in 1744 when Buck made a sketch of the ruins. Since that date much of the material has been removed. In 1922 careful but incomplete excavation of the foundations were carried out by Mr A W Clapham. The Church an aisle-less cruciform building with a central tower. Mr Clapham found that the “only remains of the internal arrangements of the Church are those of the north end of the pulpitum” which were uncovered slightly to the west of the crossing. The chapter house, a rectangular chamber 36ft by 18 ½ ft was divided from the south transept by a slype or passage. The frater, 61 1/2ft in length was placed at right Angles to the chapter house, and occupied the entire length of the south side of the cloister garth with the exception of a passage at the east end of it. “Projecting from the south wall was the frater pulpit, rectangular in form and enclosed by walls 1 ¾ ft thick.-- Visited 17th August 1922.

The temporalities of the Priory were granted at the dissolution to Roger Barlow, whose son John Barlow about the year 1565, mortgaged the property to Sir John Perrott, “as also the manor of Hubberston, and divers other lands and tenements in the county of Pembroke”. Barlow however refused to hand over the deeds of the property, as alleged in a petition by Sir John Perrott to the then Lord Chancellor (Sir Nicholas Bacon). The defendant answered thjat the original grant was to Roger and Thomas Barlow, the latter at a later date releasing all his right and title to his brother Roger from whom the property in question descended to the defendant. He “to the intent to have the good will of the complainant did by deed indented exchange the said site and emesnes, being near to the house of the said complainant” for other lands (Pub Records Office Chancery Proceedings)

There was also in the same period another suit respecting the site of the manor and mansion house of the dissolved priory and “one dubing mill”

The last prior was John Batha. He was a young man of about 28 at the Suppression.

At the Priory Mill some 300 yds to the south there are fragments of a much older building than the present.

1895 Timmins

We now make a short detour to visit the ruins of Haverfordwest Priory, which stands in a meadow close beside the Cleddau. Though of considerable extent, there is not much to detain us here save a mass of crumbling arches and the ivy mantled walls, apparently of Early English date. This priory was established about the year 1200 by Robert de Haverford, first Lord of Haverfordwest, for the Order of Black Canons. It stands in one of those pleasant, riverside nooks that the monks of old so frequently selected.

2000 Haverfordwest's Augustinian Priory

Recent excavations at Haverfordwest's Augustinian Priory have uncovered the exceptionally rare remains of the original medieval cloister garden, thought to date around the mid- fifteenth century. The garden has now been conserved and comprises of an extensive grid of beds and paths, including one area which is more elaborate than the others and which may have been an arbour. The rectangular beds vary in size and some are raised and revetted with stone, similer to those depicted on a series of contemporary illuminated manuscripts.

The Chapel of St Mary Magdalene RCAM

These ruins consisting only of part of the north wall of a small building that was lighted with three lancet openings stand in the grounds of a modern house named Bryn Merlin. They form part of an outhouse. The history of this little Chapel is unknown – Visited 27th May 1920

George Owen stated that there was a Lazar house situate at Merlin's Bridge, Haverfordwest, dedicated by St. .Mary Magdalene.

1811 Black Friar Preachers Fenton (Tours)

About a quarter of a mile to the north of the priory on the banks of the river occupying the site of the inn now called Black Horse in Bridge Street, stood the house of the Friar Preachers; when it was first founded, of by whom endowed, is not known, the monasticon being silent concerning it. The grant by Robert Niger of a burgage for the enlarging their house which Richard II confirmed is proof of its existence before that time. I am inclined to think that its foundation may safely be ascribed to the same person who founded and endowed the priory, though the house of the friar preachers experienced the bounty of successive benefactors; for Adam Hoton, Bishop of St David's leaves ten pounds to it, and John Gilbert his successor wills, being old and infirm, to be buried in the friars, and gives one hundred pounds and vestments to the convent. In the Bodleian MSS.

By a letter from a dignitary of St David's to Browne Willis, I find that the effigy of a Bishop, most likely Gilbert had been dug up about fifty years before by the person who took down some of the once sacred ruins to make a lime kiln, and the writer adds, that he soon fell into poverty for this sacrilege.

Probably founded by Robert de Haverford. Its site lay between the two lanes known as the Friars and the Hole in the wall. (Phillips Arch Camb 1898)

1922 RCAM – A house of Black Friars

Formerly existed in the town of Haverfordwest, the site being specifically fixed by Fenton (Tour p207) as “in the Bridge Street” in the parish of St Martins. Leland's note runs -”In Haverford town three paroch churches [St Martins, St Marys, St Thomas], one of them without the toune in the suburb, Blak Freres within the toune” (Itinerary ed 1906 p63) Of this establishment not a vestige can now be traced

It is known that part of the premises was used as a public cemetery in the 17th century, perhaps earlier.

1872 The Church of St David and St. Patrick,

In Dew Street, was built in 1872 to serve the needs of an increasing Catholic population. From this parish are served a community in Johnston, St. Winifrede's and the Church of the Immaculate Conception at Narberth.

Nonconformists

The early Nonconformists first met, in 1638, at the Green Meeting House, which later became Albany Congregational Church, in Hill Street, and is now the United Reform/Methodist.

Albany Congregational Chapel was built in 1691, repaired after storm damage in 1701, enlarged in 1721. The Chapel was then rebuilt in 1842, galleries added in 1873, Albany was renovated again in 1917 by architect Arthur Thomas and in 1964 further alterations were made. The present Chapel, dated 1842, was designed by architect William Owen and built in the Gothic style with a gable-entry plan. The exterior is painted stucco and the roof made of slate. The rear gable end has a recessed plaque 'Albany Congregational Church Founded 1638'. Albany is now Grade 2 Listed for its special historical interest as one of the earliest Chapel causes in Wales

Bethesda Baptist Chapel, in Barn Street, was built in 1789, and enlarged in 1816. It was then rebuilt, in "Welsh Romanesque" style, in 1878, by George Morgan of Carmarthen at a cost of £2,199. It is one of the finest Chapel buildings in Wales and has a seating capacity in excess of 900.

Calvary Pentecostal Church was established in 1973 and is in membership with "Assemblies of God".

Hill Park Baptist Church, at the bottom of Prendergast Hill, was built in 1888 to replace an earlier building of 1857 which was then used as a vestry and schoolroom. The 1888 Chapel was built in the Classical style with a gable-entry plan, to the design of architect George Morgan of Carmarthen. Hill Park was renovated in 1933 and is now Grade 2 Listed for its special architectural interest as a large late nineteenth century Chapel, along with an earlier Chapel and railings

Tabernacle Congregational Church, at the bottom of City road, was built as a Methodist Chapel in 1774 by those who considered the ministry at Albany Church insufficiently evangelical and re-opened as a Congregational Chapel in 1790. The Chapel was extensively repaired in 1851 It was rebuilt in 1874 by architects Lawrence & Goodman of Newport. The present Chapel, dated 1874, is built in the Classical style with a short-wall entry plan and elaborate detailing in the interior. Tabernacle is now Grade 2 Listed as one of the outstanding Chapels of the region. Tabernacle Chapel School . Dated 1864, 1 storey, slate roof, style matching Tabernacle Chapel; stucco decoration and date plaque..

The former Wesleyan Chapel, is now a store. It was erected on the site of the Wesley Room at the opening of which John Wesley preached on one of his fourteen visits to the town, the last of which, in 1790, is commemorated by a plaque outside the Library, in Dew Street.

1744 The Quaker Meeting House was part of a warehouse, built 1744, on the site of the present Shire Court, on the corner of Quay Street and High Street. This is said to have incorporated furniture from a former c.1700 meeting house. The warehouse closed in 1824 and was demolished soon after (ref. Butler, DM, The Quaker Meeting Houses of Britain, Vol. II). The Quakers moved to the New Quay, beyond the Bristol Trader when the Shire Hall was built on the site in 1835

Macpelah Baptist 1851 David Davies, Minister Albert St, Albert Town Machpelah Baptist Chapel Albert St. was built in 1834 and rebuilt in 1842 in the later Vernacular style of the gable-entry type. By 1994 Machpelah stood disused and was demolished in 1999. However the nineteenth century churchyard walls, gates and gatepiers are Grade 2 Listed as a well-built graveyard.

Education

1488 Richard Smyth, described as “Chaplain of St Mary”s was appointed School Master of

1839 Topographical Dictionary of Wales – Lewis

Haverfordwest Grammar School.

In the Parish of St Thomas (Fenton, the historian, was educated al this school.)

The Free grammar-school was founded by Thomas Lloyd, of Kîl Kifith, esq., who, by will dated November 22nd, 1612, endowed it with dwelling houses, lands, and fee-farm rents, in the parishes of St. Mary, St. Thomas , and St. Martin, producing at present an income of £118, together with a dwelling house occupied by the master, valued at £25 per annum, and fields let at £16. A condition of Lloyds trust was that the scholars should be the 'sons of such as should be of the Pooler sort of people and not of any who were of great wealth and ability."To this endowment Mr. John Milward, of Haverfordwest, added a third part of certain houses and lands in Bordesley near Birmingham, giving the other two portions respectively to the master of the Birmingham free grammar school, for his own use, and the Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford, for the foundation of a scholarship in that College for a boy from each of these schools alternately. The portion of the estate assigned to the school of this town, having been let by the Corporation, who are trustees, upon a lease of ninety-nine years, produces only £18 per annum, and the other two portions, being injudiciously let on leases for twenty-one years, subject to large fines on renewal, produce only £8. 6. 8. per annum each; consequently, the scholarship is not sufficient to induce any young man from either of those schools to enter at that College. The mastership of the Haverfordwest school is in the gift of the mayor and Corporation, who also nominate the boys to be educated in it; the present number of scholars is twenty-eight, nearly all of whom are on the foundation. The schoolroom, erected about 1761, adjoining the churchyard, and capable of accommodating about fifty boys, is in the parish of St. Thomas ; in which, also, is Tasker's charity school, noticed hereafter.

In the parish of St. Mary is a National school for boys, established in 1841, and held in the old poorhouse; it is supported partly by school-pence, but chiefly by subscriptions.

St. Martin's parish contains a school of industry for girls, and an infants' school, the former entirely, and the latter partly, maintained by Mrs. Philipps, of Gloucester-place, Haverfordwest; also a "British" infants' school, supported by subscription, and managed by a committee of ladies. There are several Sunday schools in the town.

1847 The State of Education in Wales Town and County of Haverfordwest

This town may be called an inland port for Pembrokeshire, much as Carmarthen is for Carmarthenshire; both being situated on estuaries, and the outlets of large agricultural districts.

The town lies in the parishes of St Mary, Prendergast and St Thomas . It has three suburbs, viz.

Prendergast on the north Cartlett on the east and Merlin's Bridge in St Thomas 's parish on the south. Many of the Pembrokeshire Clergy reside in Haverfordwest, and more families of the upper classes than in the towns on the northern side of the county.

Beside Tasker's charity-school there is a free grammar school in the town. This school was closed for the holidays during my stay at Haverfordwest. I annex some replies to Queries with which the master ,the Rev James Thomas furnished me.

Free Grammer School

Has any alteration taken place in the funds of the school since the Report of the Charity Commissioners? [CCR p709] And if so what alteration?

Owing to the bas state of repair in which some of the houses belonging to the school were left, a considerable reduction has been made since the Report of the Commissioners. There is however a case about being decided in the Court of Chancery, the effect of which will, it is hoped , be advantageous to the charity. The bill was filed ex officio by the Attorney General about ten years ago, by the recommendation of the Charity Commissioners.

What is the number of boys – a] on the books b]usually attending c] present on the 31st of March in the morning ?

The number of boys on the books is 28, almost all of whom attend pretty regularly. On the last day of March 23 attended.

Of the boys on the books how many are – a] boarders or pay-scholars; b] foundationers?

There are now no boarders. Three only are pay-scholars, all the others are free.

What are the subjects taught in School?

English grammar; history and geography; Latin and Greek; Euclid, and in some cases the elements of logic. The upper boys Read Euripides, Homer, and the Greek Testament; Horace, Virgil; Arnold's Latin and Greek Exrcises. They usually do hexameters and pentameters from Bland

At what ages do the boys commonly a] enter; b] leave?

Often as early as eight years, and are very irregular as to their time of leaving; some leave very soon, some stay eight or nine years.

Is the Charity, upon its present footing made as useful as it might be?

As a school for providing a cheap classical education for children of respectable parents, it might be much benefited by the Corporation's declining to send boys of a low a station in life, and who come very ignorant, and often cannot find books to continue their studies; in which case they often abruptly leave just at the time when the master expects to see some fruit or at least some promise of fruit, from his labours.

If not , state your reasons for saying so, and any improvements which strike you as desirable, and not contradictory to the founder's intention.

I believe the letter of the law is kept by the Corporation. In my opinion, however, they have acted very injudiciously, lowering the character of the school, and depriving the master of all hope of increasing his income by pay-scholars of a respectable class. A stock of good elementary books would be the best thing (under the circumstances) to make the school more efficient. NB. I am so dissatisfied with the present state of things that I would Readily listen to any suggestion which could be made for rendering the charity more useful. I would have no objection whatever to training a large class of young men for schoolmasters or catechists. Formerly (before the College at Lampeter was established), I usually had a large class preparing for holy orders.

1765 circa Old Grammer School built - Now demolished

1913 Grammar School is regulated by a scheme under this Welsh Intermediate Act 1881 and the Endowed Schools Acts.

Until 1978 Haverfordwest Grammer School originally founded in 1488 was for a time in the 20th Century one of the only two Public schools in Wales

Parish of St Martin's

School of Industry and Mrs Thomas 's Infant School

The former school, which is only for girls, is entirely supported and for the most part conducted by Mrs Philipps of Gloucester Place Haverfordwest. The school is held in a room under the Wesleyan Chapel. The room is spacious, and, although underground, did not feel close. The girls were seated in two Long parallel rows. They wear a kind of uniform. The patroness conducted the examination in person. They named the books of the Bible and gave some account of each simultaneously. The answers were in a set form which had been learned by all. The form was generally very short and good. The children had evidently learnt a great deal. They sang a hymn very sweetly. I had never heard it before. Thirteen of them Read the 13th chapter of St Matthew, extremely well and answered some questions from it proposed by the Rev. W Harris – It is a rule of this school that all who are admitted must be able to Read. The neatness and regularity which seemed to prevail in the school, the industrial training, and more than all, the present superintendence and permanent interest which the patroness exhibits for the scholars must make the school a valuable instrument of Female education among the poor of the neighbourhood.

The school of Mrs Thomas is held on the opposite of the entrance which leads to the School of Industry, and is supported by the same lady. It contains both boys and girls. The room is small and very ill ventilated. There is only one window, and neither this nor the fireplace is opposite to the door. I found 26 children there, in a very unpleasant and unhealthy atmosphere. They sang from dictation of the patroness a few simple verses descriptive of the Gospel promises, then the alphabet and some simple combinations of letters then the multiplication tables. Music and rhythm seemed a very judicious media for conveying these first rudiments of secular or religious knowledge to young minds. They were a nice looking set of children. This would be a good infant school if held in a more airy and commodious room and provided with further apparatus. But what particularly pleased me in this infant school was, to see all that irrational manipulation dispensed with which one commonly encounters in such places.

British Infant School

I visited this school on the 6th January. The room, though large and lofty, did not appear to be well ventilated ; it smelt very close; there were three windows, all on one side, three skylights, two doors opposite to each other; a fireplace at one end, and a gallery at the other; there was an apparatus for ventilation in the floor. I found the children grouped round their monitors, listlessly repeating the sentences on the cards. They changed their position from card to card in a most disorderly manner and in very bad time; the rear of the column always broke into confusion, and the room occasionally resembled a noisy nursery. A great deal of time was taken up in their marching and counter marching – the Masters manner seemed kind. They answered question in a pleasing manner. I heard 12 Read the 12th chapter of St Luke. They Read indifferently keeping no stops, slurring the short words, and omitting (as did the master) the aspirates. They answered very ill. The master teaches these 30 in the afternoon reading, writing, and arithmetic while the mistress instructs the rest of the school. The school is managed by a committee of ladies, who politely afforded me every facility in my inquiries respecting it

Misses Jenkin's School

The governesses appeared to be amiable and intelligent, and to give satisfaction to the parents. The copy books at school were well written. The furniture consisted only of one large table, one Long desk, and ten benches. The scholars are tradesmen's and mechanics children; there were none present owing to the Christmas holidays --- January 8th 1847 WM. Morris Assistant.

Miss John's(North Cottage) School

The cottage in which this school is held is situated on the road from Haverfordwest to Fishguard. It stands on an eminence with a garden in front, and is in good repair. The governess is an elderly woman in a weak state of health. She spoke English correctly. I saw in the room two tables, two desks and four benches, but no maps of any kind. The scholars are tradesmen's and mechanics' children, and were very clean and neat. They Read the 3th chapter of 1 Samuel exceedingly well and answered the questions put to them from the chapter very correctly. Arithmetic geography and history questions were answered. Several of the copy books were fairly written. January 8th 1847 WM. Morris Assistant.

Mr Harries's School

The floor of the schoolroom had many holes in it, and the walls were very dirty. The master had received a good education and could speak English correctly. The schoolroom contained one master's desk, three desks for the scholars, and five benches, the 2nd chapter of St Matthew was Read exceedingly well by several of the scholars, who answered questions from the chapter Readily. English, geography and Arithmetic questions were answered correctly, some of the copybooks were fairly written. January 8th 1847 WM. Morris Assistant.

Mrs Moore's School

When I arrived at this school the mistress was busily engaged in sewing and continued to do so while I was there. There were nine children sitting in the room with her poring over their primers, and two in the Testament. The school furniture consisted only of two tables and two benches. There were several articles for domestic use in the room besides. Nothing beyond reading and sewing are taught. A part of the 2nd chapter of Galatians was Read but no answer's given to the questions proposed by the mistress or myself. – January 8th 1847 WM. Morris Assistant.

Miss Salmon's School

This school is kept in a ground floor room in the house of the mistress's father. Two desks 1 table and six benches composed the school furniture. Miss Salmon appeared to be better educated than the generality of School mistresses and spoke English grammatically. Few labourers' children are in her school, the majority of them are those of tradesmen and mechanics. The copy books were taken home. January 7th 1847 WM. Morris Assistant.

Mr John Thomas 's School

The schoolroom was very dirty, though in tolerably good repair. I saw three large tables, 6 benches , coal and culm, and lumber of various kinds. Mr Thomas appears to have received a good education, spoke English well, and had Long experience in teaching. Some of his pupils were well dressed, and are the children of tradesmen and mechanic's. There were few labourers' children present. They Read the 15th chapter of St Luke well and answered questions from the chapter correctly. They also answered geography and arithmetic questions. Some of the copy books were well written. January 8th 1847 WM. Morris Assistant.

Sunday Schools

Tabernacle School

This school belongs to the Independents, and is held in their Chapel both morning and afternoon, but is more numerously attended in the afternoon. A large proportion of the scholars Read remarkably well and answered questions put from the chapters with ease. The severity of the weather prevented many of them it was said from being present. There were many respectable tradesmen, apparently, among both the teachers and scholars. Catechising forms a prominent part in this Sunday school. At the close I was told that two ministers were raised from this school and five scholars from one class had lately joined the Church. All the teachers engaged were brought up in the school - January 10th 1847 WM. Morris Assistant.

Wesleyan School.

This school is held for males in the same rooms as the school for industry and Mrs Thomas 's infant school, and for females in the Chapel. In the infant school room the younger boys are being instructed by means of the box of moveable letters published by the Sunday school Union. I saw one class standing up before the superintendent repeating the catechism of the Wesleyan Conference collectively. Most of the scholars could Read well a large proportion being in day schools. As soon as I had finished taking the number present, and absent in the school, the operation of the separate classes was stopped, and questions proposed to the different classes of boys by the superintendent. The different classes seemed very conversant with Scripture history and answered all questions put to them most Readily. January 10th 1847 WM. Morris Assistant.

Parish of St Mary's

National School

I visited this school on the 19th of January. It is held in the old poorhouse, in an upstairs room formed by removing the partitions which once made three rooms. It is used as a Sunday school at which the day scholars are expected and compelled to attend. The desks and benches are arranged on the National system. Both are much cut and worn, and the room had generally a very dingy air. It is under the control of a committee, who were said, however, not to be active in their supervision. No school register was kept except of the pence paid, although the master had books for the purpose. He appeared an active but not very methodical man. The scholars were assembled for the first time after Christmas holidays so I saw them to great disadvantage. I found the third class (17 boys) standing up to Read the 5th chapter of St Matthew. On my entrance six of the numbers were at once dismissed as unable to Read. The rest Read very indifferently. The 1st class (16 boys) Read 1 Samuel XX all with ease. No part of the school funds are applied in buying books of which there is a great deficiency. The school was noisy and ill organised.

Miss Hopping's School

A room on the second floor in a dwelling house, rented by Miss Hopping, is the schoolroom. The furniture consisted of 1 desk, 1 table. 6 benches, 1 chair and maps of the World, Europe, Asia, America, Africa, England and Wales. The scholars were tradesmen's and respectable mechanics' children. Miss Hopping is the daughter of the master of the National school in this town, and appeared to be well qualified to discharge the duties of a governess. January 7th 1847 WM. Morris Assistant.

1887 The former Infants School in Dew Street was built in 1887, subsequently used as a Scout Hall it is presently in use as a commercial premises. RCAHMW

Parish of St Thomas

Taskers School this was founded by Mrs .Mary Tasker (previously a Miss Howard or Hayward "Fletcher Hill, Uudbaxton) in 1684, when by her will she devised to the Mayor and Corporation of Haverfordwest her farm of East Dudwell, Camrose, containing 580 acres.

Originally the school was "for poor children of both sexes" appointed by the Mayor and Trustees, "with competent maintenance to be allowed them yearly until apprenticed to convenient trades. Money to be given at setting out each apprentice and also at the expiration of their so apprenticeship."

1913 it is a High School for girls and is regulated by a Scheme under the Welsh Intermediate Act 1881

1847 Tasker's Charity School.

I visited this school on the 19th of January. It is held in a ruinous Garret. The plaster of the roof is cracked in many places, showing not merely the laths and rafters, but also here and there, the sky. Light is admitted through dilapidated windows in the roof which begins to slope almost from the floor. The floor was covered with sawdust(a common practice in the neighbourhood), and also spit over in all directions. The room and the approach to it reminded me of the sort of place usually hired at a country Fair by a conjurer or low showman. The boys sat at Long desks round the room wearing a prescribed uniform – Long blue Coats with red collars and cuffs, Red waistcoats, corduroy breeches, worsted stockings and laced boots. This costume was not in all cases complete. Some of them had it all except the Long coat, instead of which they wore their own short jackets; others had the Long coat with their own tattered trousers. The result was very comical. All the arrangements appeared to be the conventional ones of the most old-fashioned charity school, such as one would see them in a picture. On entering the school I found a perfect Babel of stunning noise. The boys were said to be learning to Read their lesson. This was performed by each boy reading it over for himself and on his own account, at the top of his voice. When 25 boys were doing this at the same time, each at a different verse, the din may be imagined better than described. The master had just parted with most of his senior pupils, and had not had time to classify his school since the recent admissions. He seemed an intelligent man. The 25 boys whom I heard Read the 12th chapter of St John did so for the most part very fairly, and answered scriptural questions by no means ill. Some of them also acquitted themselves creditably in arithmetic, knowing some little of Practice, and employing it in mental calculations.

1890 Tasker's School situated opposite St Mary's Church designed by T.P. Reynolds and opened circa 1890

1847 Union Workhouse School

I visited this school on the 5th January. The workhouse is very pleasantly situated. The master of the house served for upwards of 30 years in the Fusilier Guards; he appeared a kind and intelligent man. No house Chaplain is appointed; ministers of various denominations attend by turns to preach on the evenings of Thursday and Sundays. The Rev J Thomas, master of the grammar school in Haverfordwest has a lecture on Friday evenings. Everyone in the house attends each of these services. On Sunday mornings the children go to the parish Church if the weather permits. No objections have ever been made by any person in the house on religious grounds. Nothing like a Sunday school has been attempted within the walls. There were at the time of my visit 84 persons of whom 70 were children. Of the latter at least 60 (the master assured me) were illegitimate.

Pembrokeshire was said to be the worst county in Wales for bastardy.

The boys' yard was covered with a sort of loose shingle. Great pains appeared to be taken in classing the inmates both by day and night. They were said to be generally very manageable, but excessively filthy in their habits. Children enter the school at 2 ½ years.

The schoolroom was very well adapted for its purpose; not so the mode of furnishing it. There were benches along the walls, and a Long table down the centre; the table accommodated but a small portion of the scholars; the remainder sitting round the room with nothing before them, cannot conveniently be separated into classes – have a tendency to become restless by having to sit upright and hold their books – and cannot be well commanded by a single glance. I was surprised, considering these disadvantages, to see how Readily the mistress picked out her numerous classes; far more numerous indeed than need be, and approaching, by their multiplicity, to the worry of individual instruction. There were no less than eight classes of boys, and four of girls. There is only one permanent monitor, though two others assist occasionally. He is distinguished by a Long coat, while all the rest wear jackets. I was somewhat surprised to find a mistress superintending boys above 10 years of age. The master of the house however is active in maintaining discipline. The children were very orderly during my visit. If any noise occurred, it arose among the little ones, many of whom were the merest infants. There was a book of conduct kept and with two exceptions all entries were good. Corporal punishment had been ordered by the Board, to whom offenders are reported. The children in the house had been regularly instructed for a period of one year in singing, about nine months previous to my visit, first by a mistress and subsequently by a master, who attended twice a week, for an hour and a half. The girls learned spinning, knitting and sewing; specimens of the latter seemed very nicely done. There was a spinning wheel in the room. There are many entirely Welsh parishes in the union. All the children, however, whom I examined, were well acquainted with English.

As the children entered a very little girl observed that I had let fall a book, picked it up and gave it to me with a curtsy. The children generally looked clean and were warmly clad.

On opening school they sang the Morning Hymn – all knelt down and the mistress Read a prayer; they were very quiet and I noticed nothing irreverent in their manner; all joined in the Lords Prayer, the children do not Read the Bible regularly through, but chapters are selected for each lesson at the mistress's discretion.

First class of boys (8) -They Read part of the 23rd chapter of St Luke – could all Read with ease. The copy books were clean and some of them well written. Arithmetic Fair.

Second class (7) I heard them Read part of the 8th chapter of St Mark -Could all Read with ease and answered questions on what Read. Arithmetic Fair.

Third class (5) Could all Read with tolerable ease and answer questions on what was Read.

1st Class of girls – could all Read fairly and answer questions on what was Read. The writing was clean but not as good as the boys.

The boys are allowed to play, not only in their yard but round the house, which stands on a commanding terrace. There is a mast for them to climb. It is also to be mentioned, to the great credit of this school, that the girls Readily obtain situations from it, and indeed, are much sought after. In some instances, where they have gone to Welsh parishes they have become something like governesses for the farmers children.

Some slight alterations, such as furnishing the room on the National or British system, increasing the number of monitors, organizing the school into one third of the present number of classes, and a small outlay in apparatus enabling the mistress to give a more extended course of oral instruction, would render this school one of the best dame schools of those which have come under my observation in South Wales.

Mr Arnold's School (Merlin's Bridge)

The schoolroom is on the second floor in the master's dwelling house. It is not high enough (only 5ft) to stand upright in. The master spoke English correctly. He writes with his left hand. The copy books were fairly written. His scholars are composed of farmers' mechanics' and labourers' children' January 7th 1847 WM. Morris Assistant.

Mrs Bowen's School

This aged schoolmistress appeared to be in very weak health. She was clean and neat. The furniture consisted of a few benches for the infants under her care to sit upon, and some articles for domestic use. January 2th 1847 WM. Morris Assistant.

Rev Nathaniel Harries's School (Merlin's Bridge)

This school is held in a house which was used formerly as a cottage, but now as a Chapel and day school room. There is no Sunday school kept in it. The master spoke English well, but did not seem to pay so much attention to his school as to his pulpit. The furniture consisted only of 2 tables and 9 benches. The scholars are mechanics, farmers and labourer's children. The copy books were all taken home - January 9th 1847 WM. Morris Assistant.

Mrs Matthias's School

The schoolmistres seemed to be a clever woman and to know the Infant and National systems well, as far as I could judge from her conversation but she laboured under many disadvantages to carry them into effect for want of a proper schoolroom and apparatus. The furniture consisted only of a few benches, desks and chairs. --January 2th 1847 WM. Morris Assistant.

Miss Thomas 's School

This governess is very young but intelligent. She is assisted by her father occassionally. The furniture consists only of a few benches --January 7th 1847 WM. Morris Assistant.

Haverfordwest prison data

The Cockhouse

Vaulted medieval building used as County Gaol 17th-18th century; demolished circa 1850.

Between 1674 and 1780 (the precise date cannot be ascertained), the Castle site was let, not sold, to the county of Pembroke for the purposes of occupation as a county gaol.

1779 Haverfordwest prison built on the site of the Castle. County gaol, built c.1780, in the inner ward of Haverfordwest Castle

1782 In John Howard's "Report on Prisons," printed in 1791, the following entry appears:—"Carmarthen Circuit, Pembrokeshire, County Gaol at Haverfordwest.—In 1782 I had the pleasure to find a new gaol built on the Castle Hill, instead of the ancient loathsome place of confinement."

"Haverfordwest Town and County Gaol.—the prison was very close, dirty, and offensive. The room over it, used as a Bridewell, clean." The last-mentioned was at that time used as the town police station.

1797 The Castle site prepared for defence following the French landings at Fishguard. 415 French prisoners of war held in the prison following the landings.

1812 The Town Goal and Bridewell.

Keeper, Patrick Banner; a Shoe-maker. Salary £2 10s.

Allowance to Prisoners, two pence each per day.

Remarks:

This miserable Goal stands near the Court House, and has one room below, for Felons, with two above it; one of which is for the use of Debtors; the other, about 13ft square, is the Bridewell. These last, however, are occupied accordingly as the Keeper and his Prisoners determine their option. Straw is allowed them, upon wooden bedsteads. No court-yard. No water accessible.

No Table.

For the removal of Transports he is allowed the expense attending it.

Chaplain: Rev. William Thomas . Duty - Prayers on Wednesday and Friday. Salary £20.

Surgeon: Mr. Thomas . Salary £15 for Criminals only.

Number of Prisoners Debtors Felons &c

1800 May 4th, 3 Debtors 8 Felons and three Lunatics.

Allowance, to the Debtors, none whatever. To the Felons, and other Criminals, 2 lbs of Bread per day each, sent by the Baker, on Mondays and Thursdays, in loaves of 7 lbs each. Convicts under sentence of Transportation, have not the King's allowance of 2s 6d per week.

Remarks:

This Goal is built within the walls of the Old Castle, and has a spacious and airy court-yard, about 108 feet square, in which Men and Women, debtors and Felons, are indiscriminately associated during the day time. It has a Chapel, but no Infirmary, nor a bath.

Here are five cells and a kitchen for felons, with a Bridewell room for the men; and above these, five rooms for Debtors, who are allowed straw, on wooden bedsteads; also a room called the Women's Bridewell, and a storeroom, where the straw for the bedding is deposited.

The Felon's sleeping cells each 12ft by 6ft 9, open into a passage 4ft wide. Their being sunk three steps under ground rendered it absolutely necessary they should have bedsteads; but at my visit in 1803, there was nothing but straw laid on the brick floors; and the Gaoler told me, that for a month together, eight or ten prisoners had been crowded every night into each cell.

Formerly a six-penny loaf was given weekly to each poor Debtor confined here - the produce, in part, of a pious and charitable donation; and the remainder of it was distributed in two penny loaves, to the poor in the Town of Haverfordwest. It appears, (though not from any Memorial found here) that " Mrs Martha Bowen declared in her will, that one hundred pounds had been deposited in her hands by an unknown person, about the year 1751, for the benefit of Insolvent Debtors, and the poor; which said sum of £100 was invested in New South Sea Annuities, in Trust to the Rectors of St Mary's Haverfordwest". I found the rector, Mr Ayleway, at the time of my visit, quite superannuated so as to be incapable of giving me any account of its distribution; but undoubtedly, his papers on the subject must be such as to throw a beneficial light upon it, in favour of the humble claimants. The Gaoler told me that no Debtor had received the Bread from the 16th of August 1802 till the month of January, 1803., when two sixpenny loaves were sent; and he afterwards informed me by letter (for which I thank him) that he had received the Bread so lately as in December 1804. Matters of a nature so recently may easily be traced; or else the lapse of time may as easily obliterate them from the memory of others, and thus defeat the exemplary purpose of many a benevolent Donation.

The County allows a common fire for all the prisoners in this Goal, during the Winter months from Michaelmas to Lady-Day. In the great dearth of provisions, (1800, 1801) the sufferings of the Debtors induced Lord Cawder to order the surplus of soup distributed on that occasion to be sent to the Prison; which provided a great relief.

There is a fine well of water in the centre of the court-yard. No employment furnished for the Prisoners. Neither the Act for Preservation of their Health, nor the Clauses against Spirituous Liquors, are hung up.

1821 Last execution in Pembrokeshire held at Haverfordwest with William Roblin being hung for murder before a large crowd.

1822. By the act of 1822 the common gaol and house of correction for Pembrokeshire, to the purposes of which the remains of the ancient Castle have been assigned, is appropriated for the reception of prisoners both for Pembrokeshire and Haverfordwest: the buildings are well calculated for the classification of prisoners, and comprise eight wards; two workrooms, one for males and one for females; eight day rooms, and eight airing-yards, in one of which is a treadmill. The County Gaol at Haverfordwest was one of the first provincial prisons within Wales to install a treadmill. A corn-grinding 'mill' was installed at the prison some date before August 1823. The mill was designed and built by Sir William Cubitt, who had installed similar mills in twelve other British prisons. The treadmill provided work for up to 64 prisoners, men and women.

Executions

1821 The last execution in Haverfordwest was one that excited a good deal of sympathy.

Roblin, a man who was found guilty, first of manslaughter, and that verdict being refused by the presiding Judge, afterwards of murder, though it was very generally felt that the first verdict would have satisfied justice, was hanged on Easier Monday 1821. In those days it was a short shrift, as he was only tried on Good Friday. Roblin acc to Brown History of Haverfordwest

John Griffiths or some records state Joseph Griffiths was publically hanged at Haverfordwest Goal on the 13th April 1811.

The accused had poisoned his wife on the 20th March 1811 by adding arsenic to her tea. He alleged he "saw a light in his house the previous night carried in a small hand". John Griffiths confessed to the poisoning and also that he had poisoned his previous wife.

Lunatic Asylum & Poor Law Union

The borough gaol and house of correction, situated on St. Thomas ' Green, in the upper part of the town, was, by an Act of Parliament passed in 1822, devoted to a lunatic asylum, as well for Pembrokeshire as for Haverfordwest.

1837-39 St Thomas 's Hospital /workhouse, originally built as a workhouse, slate gabled roof, stone rubble.

Workhouse

St Thomas Denomination-Mixed Erected in 1838

The average annual poor-rate expenditure for the period 1834-36 had been £ 11,221 or 6s. 9d. per head.

The Haverfordwest Union workhouse was built in 1837-39 at the south of Haverfordwest on an elevated site above the old Priory. The Poor Law Commissioners authorised an expenditure of £4,000 for the new building which was to accommodate around 150 inmates. The building was designed by local architect William Owen

The poor-law union of which Haverfordwest is the head, was formed Jan. 6th, 1837, and comprises the following sixty-three parishes; namely, St. Mary's, St. Thomas ', St. Martin's, Ambleston, Boulston, Brawdy, St. Bride's, Camrhos, Castle-Bigh, Dale, St Davids, St. Dogwell's, St. Edren's, St. Elvis', Fishguard, Freystrop, Granston, Harroldston, Haroldston St. Issels, Hasguard, Hayscastle, Henry'smoat, Herbrandston, Hubberston, St. Ishmael's, Johnston, Jordanston, Lambston, Llangwm, St. Lawrence, Letterson, Llandeloy, Llanhowel, Llanllawer, Llanreithan, Llanrian, Llanstinan, LlanvairNant-y-Gove, Llanwnda, Llanychaer, Manerowen, Marlais, Mathrey, Morvil, Little Newcastle, St. Nicholas', Nolton, Pontvaen, Prendergast, Puncheston, Roch, west Robeston, Rudbaxton, Spittal, Steynton, Telbenny, Trevgarn, Uzmaston, East Walton, west Walton, Walwyn's-Castle, Whitchurch, and Wiston. It is under the superintendence of 67 guardians, and the area contains a population of 37,139. "4 Clergy men attend one each Sunday - Wesleyan, Baptist, Presbyterian, Independent.

BMJ Reports on the Nursing and Administration of Provincial Workhouses and Infirmaryes, 1894-5.

British Medical Journal the commission's report on Haverfordwest workhouse

Haverfordwest, South Wales

It has rarely been our lot to visit a workhouse infirmary more unsuited for its purpose, or more ill-provided with all that is necessary for the comfort of the sick. The master Readily acceded to the request of Dr. Williams, the medical officer, to show us the infirmary; but we must confess to a feeling of surprise that the matron, whom we only saw for a brief moment, did not respond to the master's suggestion that she should accompany us through the female department. This union embraces a large extent of country, and takes paupers from sixty-six parishes; the town is the centre of a wide district.

The workhouse is well situated on a Hill, and has extensive grounds around it; it is an old house, and in every part is quite behind the times. It is built round four courts, which form the airing courts of the various departments. There is accommodation for thirty-two sick, and there is besides a fever ward placed at the top of the house, at the present time empty. The wards are of variable size, and are distributed on the ground and first floors; the largest is for eleven beds, and the smaller wards hold two or three beds; the arrangement on the male and female side is the same. The wards are dreary places, the walls dirty, washed over with dingy yellow colouring, windows on one side, only one fireplace at one end, looking bare of furniture for the sick.

The iron bedsteads are low and on them are three planks held by a crosspiece, not always laid close, and on this a chaff mattress about three inches thick. We saw the helpless bedridden old people lying on these beds, and they must have found them a sorry rest for their weary bones. There are about four spring beds distributed in the wards, but they have only the chaff mattress over the springs. There is no means of ventilation but by the windows, and, as the fireplace in some of the wards is small it is hardly probable that the atmosphere is changed in the night.

The system of warming is peculiar to this part of the country. "Culm," which is clay and anthracitic slack kneaded into balls, is used in the grates; when quite alight it is red hot and must throw out a good heat, but it is slow in kindling and can hardly be of service for obtaining a fire quickly.

The classes of patients are of the usual description found in the workhouses. On one of the spring beds there was an old woman with hemiplegia, helpless all but one hand and unable to turn herself; in the male ward was a fine man with erysipelas in his leg. On inquiring as to the treatment the "nurse" told us that he washed it for himself twice a day with Condyl's fluid, but that otherwise no dressing was used. We could not but think what a pity it was that more vigorous measures were not tried, since by a speedy curing of the leg the rates would be relieved of that man's keep. He was too long for his bed.

There were eight patients in bed in all; in this part of the infirmary, including senile debility, rheumatism, paralysis, chest complaints, and old age, and several very infirm men and women up in the wards. We were shown a small ward with four beds in it, all occupied; it opened immediately from one of the yards, it was without a fireplace, and was lighted by one small window. This is the tramps' sick ward. We could not ascertain that any one person was responsible for attendance in this ward, and, if assistance was wanted in the night, the most able-bodied of the tramps would have to go some little distance before he could obtain it, as there is no communication Bell.

The sanitary appliances are quite rudimentary; there is no water laid on to the upper floors; the only conveniences for the wards are commodes, of which there are a few in each ward; one is placed outside on each landing, intended for use at night, that for the men being enclosed within a screen, that for the women being open. It can hardly be expected that these poor infirm folk will go outside the wards on a cold night, nor is it well that they should. The commodes in the wards are emptied after 6 in the morning. On going round the wards we saw some ordinary utensils about, some of which were unemptied. The closets are all outside; they are simply cesspools, and some were very unpleasant. The water supply is ample, and is obtained from wells in the courts. The pumps in each court discharge over troughs down which the refuse water is emptied.

There is only one fixed bath, and that is in the tramps' room; it is a small one, sunk in the floor, with a tap to supply hot water, but the cold has to be carried in from the yard. We saw no baths which could be used for the sick, and, as every drop of water must be carried up or down, it is probable that bathing is not largely practised in this infirmary; indeed, the patients and their linen did not look particularly clean at the time of our visit.

The "nurse" is untrained; she is solely responsible for the care of the sick and of midwifery cases; there is no night nurse nor regular pauper help at night. On inquiring how the helpless patients were attended to during the night, we were informed that they had to obtain such assistance as they could from the more able-bodied paupers who slept in the ward. As we found that bedsores were recognised as one of the usual ailments in the infirmary, it can be imagined how much help these paupers are able to render to each other. We pictured to ourselves the sad condition of these helpless old people, passing the long hours of the dark nights on their comfortless beds, uncared for, uncleansed, unfed. We say "dark night" because we have ascertained that all lights were removed from the wards after the patients are in bed, nor did we see any appliances for lighting the staircases or passages. The labour ward is for two beds; it has no separate offices, and all refuse must be carried downstairs.

There is no system of classification; we saw the imbeciles and "harmless lunatics" among the patients in the wards; one half-witted boy was busy serving the dinners. There were no lock cases in the infirmary, and we were informed that there were no isolation wards for offensive cases. The "harmless lunatics" appeared to be straying about where they pleased.

On our way round the house we passed through the "nursery," a large ill-furnished room, the floor laid down with paving stones; there was a large table, two benches, two wooden cradles, a few chairs, the latter round a fireplace which was most insufficient to warm the room in the winter. In this room the infants stay with their mothers until they are 2 years old. There was a baby in each cradle, one looking very ill; its mother thought it was "sickening for something." There was no rug, or even a bit of sacking on which the infants might crawl; a more dreary place to be called a nursery can hardly be imagined. Though not properly coming within the scope of this inquiry, we mention this room as indicating the lack of a kindly and sympathetic spirit on the part of those responsible for the management of the house.

The dinners were being served at the time of our visit. It was "broth day"; the broth, made of mutton and vegetables, both looked and smelt good, but it was served in wooden bowls which were black with age and grease. We tasted the bread and butter, both of which were good. We saw no bed cards in the wards, but the master informed us that the medical officer has a free hand in ordering extras, and that milk and beef tea are taken into the wards for the sick at night. As the last meal is given at 6 o'clock, and the first at 8 in the morning, it is necessary that the old people should have something to take in the night.

The day room on the men's side is used for sleeping purposes; there were four beds in it; it is also the tailor's shop where the male clothing is looked over and mended. It is a very small room, with one window, and at the time of our visit the floor was piled with clothing, and the air of the room was quite unwholesome. On the women's side the day room is not used for a sleeping room; it had one large settle in it, but no comfortable chairs or anything to make it homely. On passing through one of the courts we were shown the disinfecting apparatus. It is a small galvanised iron box, like a good-sized tank, the lid broken at the edges, and having underneath it a tray for the fire; this was standing in a shed close to the closets.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

It seems hopeless to make any recommendation in the case of this infirmary. The building is unsuitable for its purpose, and the system on which it is worked is faulty in every particular.

1930, the workhouse was renamed officially renamed Haverfordwest Institution although it was also known as Priory Mount. With the onset of the Second World War, it came into service as a hospital. After the war, it was renamed St Thomas Hospital and was unit of the County Hospital and WithyBush Hospital. It closed in 1978 and was converted into flats in 1982.

1651 Plague

Rev. James Phillips in his "History of Pembrokeshire" says that tradition has persistently asserted that the plague was brought to Haverfordwest on a Market day by sailors from an infected ship lying in Milford Haven. Those who died of the pestilence are said to have been buried in a field off Cokey Street. The population at this time was about 3,000. The Corporation rented two houses in St. Martin's, one was used as the Pest house and the other was "had for the TarrCoats" or men who tended the sick and buried the dead. Sanitary regulations were drawn up and the people exhorted to repentance and prayer and to avoid sin. The County contributed £48 13s 7d to help to relieve the famine conditions which supervened.

Plague reached the county in October 1651 and attacked the town of Haverfordwest in particular: 207 people died there in the first nine months. But it was not an especially severe visitation; indeed, its retreats and reappearances caused the more annoyance in that it became matter for argument whether a Market ought to be held within the town boundaries or not. In March 1652 it was urged that of the two thousand inhabitants not more than thirty had a week's provisions laid by, while the mercers, shoemakers and feltmakers of the town, who had obtained stock lately from St. Paul's Fair, could not sell their goods because nobody came in from the countryside to buy. The mayor and aldermen requested the justices of the peace for the county to send provisions both to Haverfordwest itself and to the villages south and east of it, such as Great Pill, Waterston, Honeyborough, Newton in Roose and Prendergast, where the plague was rife. The justices opted for the easier alternative. Understanding "that the sickness is not so contagious as is reported, only four houses being infected and none at present sick in them", they relaxed their previous ruling: the inhabitants of Dungledy hundred were to be permitted to attend the Market in Haverfordwest once again.

In April, however, the plague intensified. Seventeen more were dead in Haverfordwest and about sixty people from infected houses confined to the pest-house within "the Castle towne". All these became a burden on the council, who in May were much up in arms at the action of the "Pembrok gent" (that is, the justices of the peace for the county) in forbidding all commerce with the town and removing the May Fair (the St. Thomas 's Fair) usually held on the west side of Furzy Park, to Lawhaden. Despite the belief of the councillors that the hearts of the justices were hardened against them, a letter from Stephen Love to Sampson Lort and Henry White, followed by consultations between the three, resulted in a justices' order of 13 May to the high constables of Dungledy hundred requiring them to collect voluntary contributions of money, corn, butter, cheese and other provisions and to take them to Portfield to be collected by the mayor or his deputy. Moreover, the voluntariness of the offerings was to be a matter of appearance only. "As true Christians cannot be void of such a measure of Christian fellow-feeling and sense of their near-neighbours' misery as not to contribute towards their belief", the names of those able to contribute but declining to do so were to be noted. But the buying and weighing of wool, normally done in Haverfordwest, was, during the incidence of the sickness, to be held at Steynton every Tuesday and at Lawhaden every Saturday.

The "voluntary" benevolence resulted, during the next month or so, in money or provisions to the value of almost £50 being sent in to Haverfordwest, £4 of which came from Sir Hugh Owen (now, apparently, back in the county). And from 13 July the justices gave order for a monthly rate of £80 to be raised from all the hundreds Throughout Pembrokeshire for the relief of the sick and needy in the town As late as the third week in September nearly 600 persons in Haverfordwest were receiving a share of the relief made available, 16 of them sick in the pest-house, 15 recovering there and another 9 in a separate house in Cokey Street.

Meanwhile the plague had been spreading northwards. On 24 May it was said to be "at the Ford in the hundred of Dewsland and in other places there". By the autumn the town of Newport was affected. But for Haverfordwest the worst was over.

City road - When building work was going on quantities of small coins etc. were found which would give rise to the supposition that a Market or Fair was held there. Was this the site of the St Thomas 's May Fair which was held on the west side of Furzy Park.

Although there was a legend that plague victims had been buried outside the town I have found no evidence of that. - It would be quiet in keeping for the time that with the relative small numbers dying each week that they would be buried in the existing churchyards. St Thomas had a very large grave yard and also the site of the Black Friary could have been used.

The pest house was within the town walls - the Bateman stable was also in the lower town and the other house used was in Coker St -- again probably within the town walls quite possibly near the Holloway.

[In 1650 a Londoner Stephen (sometimes spelt Steven) Love and his wife Deborah arrived in Pembrokeshire. He had been appointed to the living of Cosheston, the Rector of which at that time was Peregrine Phillips, as a result of his work with the Propagation Committee. I could find no evidence that he had taken Holy Orders. He would have lived in the Rectory just down from the Church which is now the site of a private house.

The area was just recovering from the effects of the second Civil War but in that year Tenby was visited by an even greater disaster. In the town an outbreak of plague had occurred.

Haverfordwest records show that there was a house to house collection in the town for the relief of the sick and distressed in Tenby. How many died we do not know but the Mayor of Tenby gave a shilling for a shroud for each poor person and it is recorded that that sum came to 113 shillings. 113 poor people died how many more affluent townsfolk died as well?

The next year a ship arrived and berthed at Haverfordwest. To avoid being quarantined it is believed to had anchored in the Haven down near the present site of the Cleddeau bridge. The bodies of several young seamen wrapped in their hammocks were hastily buried in the mud below the high tide Mark. So hastily that one had a coin of 1650 buried with him. (These were found during the construction of the Cleddeau Bridge)

Meanwhile in 1651 Stephen Love had been moved from Cosheston to St Thomas 's Church Haverfordwest as according to records Puritan Rector and on May 13th 1652 "Love Stephen (Cleric?) HW Corp MS 584 (1) "Minister of the Gospel was appointed Vicar of St Mary's"

Rector St Thomas Church Haverfordwest

1651- Stephen Love

1650; 'Stephen Love Lecturer claimed to be appointed for St. Mary's 1652 also Puritan Rector of St. Thomas

“Henry White and Samson Lort to the High Constables of the Hundred of Dungleddie

Whereas the town of Haverfordwest was in times past the usual place for buying and weighing of wool, and forasmuch as the said town is now infected with the plague, wherby it is not safe for people to meet and stay there on that of the like business without great danger of spreading the said infectious disease, these are therefore to require you to give summons to the inhabitants of the several parishes within your hundred that Tuesday in every week is appointed to meet at Staynton and Saturday in every week to meet at lawhadden for the weighing of wool as aforesaid during the time of the sickness and present visitation in Haverfordwest aforesaid, whereof you are not to fail at your perils”

(Haverfordwest Corporation MS 584 (ii))

Two other entries in the Haverfordwest records make interesting reading as well:-

William Davids 1652 May 24 Treasurer of the Poor - fled plague.

John Edowe 1652 May 24 High Constable - fled plague.

Other Sites of Interest

The Parade, Scotchwells, Fortune's Frolic and The Ghyle - were much used and appreciated, by exercise enthusiasts, nature lovers and, most of all, by lovers. It was a great pleasure in the unsophisticated times to stroll these paths, The Parade and The Frolic affording marvelous views of the river the railway line and open countryside, and Scotchwells, with its leet running alongside, providing glimpses of rare sylvan beauty.

The Frolic, probably unknown to most of the present generation, is steeped in history. Running alongside the river bank from New road to Uzmaston, it was given to the town by a noted 18th century benefactor, Francis Fortune, and for generations was an important link between the town and Uzmaston village. It was also the scene of the last duel fought on Pembrokeshire soil.

Apparently, a member of the Fortune family, Samuel Simmons Fortune, then living at Leweston, Camose, had a quarrel with John James (afterwards Colonel James of Pantaeson) while they were attending a Hunt Ball at Tenby. The two young men were friends - John James was engaged to be married to Samuel's sister - and had ridden over to Tenby together. But they quarrelled in the yard of the White Lion Inn, blows were exchanged and they eventually agreed to settle their differences by duel.

The duel was arranged with due ceremony and it took place at the end of September, 1789, at Fortune's Frolic. Fortune was killed and, in former days, it used to be said that his ghost sometimes stalked the area.

The Ghyle, running from Prendergast Church area up past David Lewis' farm (later Mr Williams') to the old paper mills, also had its ghost - a white lady (what else) who used to come out in the evenings and walk along the grass verges moaning softly for the loss of her Husband who had been killed in the Civil War. Several local people used to claim that they seen this lady, but she seems to have stopped her perambulations many years ago.

Martyr

One of the three Marian martyrs in Wales was William Nichol "a simple, poor man" of Haverfordwest. He was burned at the stake on 9 April, 1558, in High Street on a spot marked by a Balmoral red granite column.

Foxe's 'Book of Martyrs,'

"The suffering and martyrdome of William Nicole, put to death by the wicked hands of the Papistes, at Haverfordwest in Wales.

"We finde in all ages from the beginning, that Sathan hath not ceased, at all tymes, to molest the Church of Christ, with one affliction or another, to ye trial of theyr faith, but yet never so apparently at any time to all the world as when the Lord hath permitted him power over the bodyes of the Saintes to the shedding of theyr blood and perverting of religion, for then sleepeth he not, I warrant you, from murdering of the same unless they will fall down with Achab and Isabell to worship hym, and so kill and poyson thayr owne souls eternally; as in these miserable latter days of Queen Mary we have felt, heard and seene practised upon God's people".

"Among whom we find recorded an honest good simple poore man, one William Nicoll, who was apprehended by the champions of the Pope for speaking certayne wordes agaynst the cruell kingdom of Antichrist and on the ix of Aprill 1558 was publicly burnt and tormented at Harefordvvest in Wales where he ended his life in a most happy and blessed state and gloriously gave his soule into the handes of the Lord whose goodness he prayes for ever and ever. Amen."

"Thys William Nicoll (as we are informed), was so simple a good soule that many esteemed him half foolish. But what he was we know not, but thys we are sure of—he dyed a good man and in a good cause whatsoever they judge of him. And the more simplicity and feebleness of wit appeared in him the more beastly and wretched doth it declare their cruell and tyrannical act therein. The Lord give them repentance therefore if it be hys blessed will. Amen and Amen."

Cuckoo Grove Rath (Earthwork)

A circular enclosure , a quarter of a mile west of Cuckoo Lane. When perfect it had a diameter of 150ft. The northern part, in which was probably the entrance, has entirely disappeared. The southern part is represented by a bank which has a rise of 3ft from the interior, and a fall of 4ft. There are slight traces of a ditch. The field is known as Rath park. A low, pitched lane between high banks connects this field with the high road – Visited 19 May 1920 RCAM

Parish of Furzy Park and Portfield

In Arch Camb 1898 the Rev James Phillips states that at some unknown date a small strip of land chiefly marsh was included in the borough limits. This land extended westwards for more than two miles and included a large stretch of common land, the greater part of which, he says, was enclosed about sixty years ago (about 1840). This elevated ground is known as Portfield. The enclosures have left as common land only the racecourse and a space of about forty acres.

St Caradoc Well

This spring of a great local celebrity was an open well until its enclosure in 1838. It is approached by a narrow lane from Merlin's Bridge, a short mile to the south of the town of Haverfordwest, and is now outside, though doubtless it was formerly within the town lands of Portfield, which at one time extended over 900 acres. St Caradoc's Fair was held annually on Easter Monday on the fields around the well, and the well itself was the resort of would-be lovers, who offered three pins on the morning of the Fair day. The waters are also reputed to have possessed medicinal virtues. St Caradoc's hermitage is said to have stood a little westward of the well. (Pem. Arch. Survey)

Mines and Mining

Greenhill Ochre Mine

This mine was situated approximately one mile south of Haverfordwest in a residential area and the site is now covered by a housing estate. The Ochre deposits were discovered on land belonging to Mrs Bushe by a local Mining engineer Mr Summons while sinking a well in 1910 in a field adjoining Haroldston Close. The deposit was at least 25ft thick at a depth of 50 ft below the surface. Three shafts were sunk

No 1 in the garden behind No 35 Haroldston Close

No 2 north East of the north end of Venns Close

No 3 the site occupied by No 59 and 61 Pembroke Rd

Mining was discontinued in 1919.

Haverfordwest, Hamlet of St Thomas

045 Un-named Mine Exact location not known; ochre working near Cinnamon Grove Gate, probably opencast working.

Skomer Island (Part of the Parish of St Martin Haverfordwest)

Skomar 1839 Lewis

SKOMAR, a small island, forming a detached portion of the parish of St. Martin, Haverfordwest, in the county of Pembroke, South Wales, situated off St. Bride's Point, from which it is separated by a strait named Jack Sound. It lies nearly due north of the islet of Skokham, from which it is divided by a strait, a mile and a half in breadth, called broad Sound; and comprises an area of about seven hundred acres, a considerable portion of it under tillage. It abounds with rabbits, has an abundance of fresh water, and is based on limestone, of which there are various detached rocks on its shores, the principal being Midland Isle, in Jack Sound. The whole is let to a resident tenant.

Harold Stone

An erect stone "about 8ft high" 100 yds south west of North Castle cliff in the north east corner of the island (Pem Arch Survey)

Hut Circles

“ The largest collection of hut circles I ever saw is grouped on Skomer Island, where they may be counted by hundreds, and many of them are surrounded by an enclosure marked out with single stones, containing about a quarter of an acre. In this yard of garden there is generally a small cairn. The number of these circles is so great that if they had been inhabited at one and the same time, it would certainly have been necessary to import food from the mainland. I was informed by the boatman that on the rock known as Midland in Jack Sound there are one or two” (Laws Little England 1888 p15)

After a later visit Mr Laws wrote that there had been digging in some of the huts which had disclosed calcined clay flooring. “Among the debris I found an egg shaped stone, artificially worked and I think an amulet, but it had been knocked about with a hammer; it almost looked like a pounder” (Pem Arch Survey 71)

The Neck Camp -Promontory Fort

In the south west corner of the island is a peninsular called The Neck, and at its furthest point is South Castle, and enclosure defended on three sides by steep cliffs, on the fourth by an artificial work of “a single line consisting of bank and ditch” (Pem Arch Survey)

Rocking Stone

“1886 A very imposing stone still in full working order on Skomer Island; though not very large it stands high somewhat pulpit fashion in a sort of natural amphitheatre” (Laws Little England 33)

However he failed to find it it when he revisited in 1898 (Laws, Pem Arch Survey)

Cairns

There are several small cairns (Pem Arch Survey 1898)

Lords of Haverfordwest Fenton 1811

The first Lord of Haverfordwest was

Robert de Hwlfordd son of Richard Fitz Tancred first Castellan under the Earl of Clare

Robert founded the priory and it is supposed died without any issue. It is suggested that he took the habit in the priory he founded.

King John was Lord of Haverfordwest after Robert de Hwlfordd (Fitz Richard) and bestowed it on Walter Marshal who died without issue and it fell to William de Breos who had married Eva , daughter and heiress of William Marshal, and therefore heiress at law to Walter Marshal.

Humphrey de Bohun married Eleanor one of the three daughters and co-heiresses of William de Breos, had one third of this Lord-ship and bought of William de Cantelupe, who married another daughter, her share so that he possessed two thirds and Roger, Lord Mortimer, in right of Maud the other daughter had one third.

Humphrey de Bohun succeeded his father to his share, and granted it to

Eleanor, wife to Edward I

Edward II granted the same to Aymer de Valence whose daughter and sole heiress was conferred in marriage on

Laurence de Hastings whose son and grandson inherited but died without issue'

Isabel wife of Richard II was made Countess of Pembroke and Lord of Haverfordwest till Richard was deposed

It was then granted to a court favourite of Henry IV

Francis a Court together with the earldom of Pembroke, who held it but a short time. To him succeeded

Humphrey ,duke of Gloucester, together with his wife Eleanor Cobham. After the death of Humphrey it was granted to

William de la Pool, Duke of Suffolk by Henry VI. After de la Pool's death it was in the Crown for two years then granted to Roland Lenthall

Jasper Earl of Pembroke held it afterwards by gift of Edward IV but on Jasper's attainder Edward , who had already the one third which belonged to the Mortimers and for want of issue became the property of

Richard Duke of York, whose mother was Mortimer's sister seized the other two parts and gave it to his son Edward, who was Lord of the whole Lord-ship of Haverford.

Richard III held it for two years and two months; then

Jasper Earl of Pembroke was again restored the 1st of Henry VII, and held it till his death eleven years.

Henry Duke of York became Lord of Haverfordwest immediately after the death of Jasper and held it till the death of Prince Arthur, when it came to the Crown by an Act of 12th of Henry VII and it has continued in the crown ever since.

“To The Mayor And Aldermen Of The Town And County Of Haverfordwest .Whereas Johnson John of Newe Castle upon Tyne, master and owner of the ship named The Danyell, being pressed lately at Bristoll for the carriage of two hundred soldiers for Her Majesty's service into Irelande, and being enforced by contrary and tempestuous winds to land in this Haven of Milford made special petition unto us whose names are subscribed for the placing of the said two hundred soldiers in some meet and convenient place during their abode here where they may be relieved with necessary vitual and provision until the wind serve for their passage hence into Ireland, we, considering that there is no place more convenient for the placing of them than the town and county of Haverfordwest, where they may be both relieved with vitual and kept best together by those that are officers over them, do therefore pray and entreat you to receive the said soldiers into your said town and to place and divide them according to your directions as in like case you have formerly done. So we refer care hereof unto you, not doubting but you shallbe allowed of all such money as you or any of you shall defray herein, as heretofore you have been.

We betake you to God.”

Cromie Francis Newton Allan Captain CB DSO of Haverfordwest

Another Pembrokeshire officer who died far from home was Captain Francis Newton Allan Cromie, at old boy of Haverfordwest Grammar School and a distinguished submarine commander in the Great War. Although born in Ireland the son of an officer in the Hampshire Regiment, his mother was the daughter of the Chief of Police in Haverfordwest where Francis was raised and educated. He entered the Royal Navy in 1898 and joined the Submarine Service in 1903. His gallant exploits in the Baltic, operating from Russian ports against the Germans, marked him out as an outstanding submarine captain. He was personally decorated by the Tsar with Russia's highest award for bravery. When the Russian revolution undermined allied military operations Cromie scuttled the British submarines in the Baltic and ensured the safe return of his crews to Britain by way of north Russia. He remained at Petrograd as Naval Attache in an increasingly confused and dangerous position. Captain Cromie was murdered in the British Embassy in 1918 and buried in Smolensky Cemetery. He was posthumously made a CB and his widow received the insignia of this and of the DSO from King George V.

Gambold Family - Moravian movement in Haverfordwest

Gambold George d. 1755 Son of William Snr He was for a while a Methodist, there is a letter of his T.L., 1256, 28 Dec. 1744 to Howel Harris, and in 1748 he was an exhorter. He continued his brother's school at Haverfordwest. In his turn, he too became a Moravian, and helped found the society which was in 1763 to become the Moravian congregation at Haverfordwest — the only one in Wales. He died in 1755 Moravian Archives Journal of the Hist. Soc. Presb. Church of Wales, September., 1961

Gambold Hector born Puncheston 1714 son of William Snr he emigrated to USA in 1742 and died in Pennsylvania in 1788 Journal of the Hist. Soc. Presb. Church of Wales, September., 1961

Gambold John 1711-1771 MA, son of William Snr -Moravian Bishop. Born 10 April 1711 at Puncheston, he matriculated 10 Oct. 1726 from Christ Church, where he came to know Charles Wesley and became one of the ' Oxford Methodists .' He graduated in 1730, was ordained in 1733, and in 1735 was appointed vicar of Stanton Harcourt near Oxford, but in 1739 he met Zinzendorff and began to lean towards Moravianism. Resigning his living in 1742, he married in 1743 and returned to Pembrokeshire, to keep school in Market-street, Haverfordwest. But in 1744 he removed to London and formally joined the Brethren's Church, in which he became a Bishop in 1753. Richard Morris had contacts with him in London Morris Letters, ii, 140-1, 221, and even his amused cynicism cannot help noting how the Bishop 'despises riches, having thrown up a good living to take up his present way of life, wherein he has no income at all, and delights in appearing poor and slovenly' — his brother Lewis comments, 'such were the bishops of the primitive times.' In 1768, Gambold 's health broke down, and he returned as congregation pastor to Haverfordwest, where he died. 13 September. 1771 on the anniversary of his father's death, he was buried behind the Brethren's Chapel. Over and above his mission-work, Gambold was a considerable Greek and Patristic scholar. His theology was 'quietist' and mystical. He had not forgotten his native language, in 1760, he revised and saw through the press a Welsh translation Un Ymadrodd ar Bumtheg ynghylch Iesu Grist of Zinzendorff's 'Berlin Discourses', and in 1770 he published a Welsh, Moravian hymn-book, Ychydig Hymnau Allan o Lyfr Hymnau Cynulleidfaoedd y Brodyr see Cymm., xlv, 112 Journal of the Hist. Soc. Presb. Church of Wales, September., 1961 Eminent Welshmen —R Williams 1852

Gambold William 1672 - 1728 cleric and grammarian. His son, Bishop Gambold in a letter printed in the preface to the first edition of John Walter's 's English-Welsh, Dictionary, states that he was born 10 Aug. 1672, 'of reputable parents' who destined him for the Church and gave him good schooling. He was according to some records a burgess of Cardigan in virtue of his ownership of the Nag's Head tavern Cardigan. But according to Foster Alumni Oxon, he was eighteen, 'pauper puer,' son of William Gambold of Cardigan, when he matriculated at S. Mary Hall, Oxford, 23 May 1693. He migrated to Exeter College in 1694, but there is no record of graduation. On 1 Dec. 1709 he became rector of Puncheston with Llanychaer, Pembs. , but it would seem that he had previously been curate there, for in Nov. 1707 he was keeping school at Llanychaer. William Gambold 's wife was Elizabeth , it is said that she was of the neighbouring parish of Llanychaer but her surname is not known. He had five children John the eldest born 1711, William born. 1712 or 1713 Hector born 1714 the third son, George and Martha His son tells us that he was a most devoted parish priest . At Oxford he had been a friend of Edward Lhuyd who acknowledges help given to him by Gambold in preparing his's additions in Gibson 's edition of Camden 's Britannia . As early as 1707 Gambold was planning a Welsh, dictionary, and this became his main occupation later on, when an accident disabled him from parochial work. It was finished in 1722 , but Gambold failed to get money to publish it. In the Morris Letters ii, 140-1, 221, 224, we hear of the Bishop trying to sell the manuscript without success to the lexicographer Thomas Richards, of Coychurch Eminent Welshmen –R Williams 1852 West Wales Records , ii, 226, iii, 250 Cymm. Trans. , 1904-5

Gambold William 1712 Jnr, never left the Methodist movement . He began to exhort in 1766 , and itinerated in North Wales Meth. Cymru , ii, 304, he was a great friend of Howel Harris None the less, he was on the friendliest terms with the Brethren , and interesting reminiscences of his on the religious history of Pembrokeshire have been preserved in the Moravian archives. By 1770 , at latest, he was farming near LLawhaden . He was still alive in 1794 Journal of the Hist. Soc. Presb. Church of Wales , September., 1961 Cylch. Cymd. Hanes M.C. , iv, 55

Gwyther James Henry Alexander Gwyther, Vicar of St Mary's.

He was the son of Maria Artemesia by her second Husband the Rev. Henry Gwyther and was born in his fathers parish of Yardley in Worcestershire. He married Mary Catherine, the daughter of William Wolrych Lea of Ludson Shropshire. After coming to Picton Castle in 1857 he remained for two years without a living, but took over St Mary's after the Rev. Thomas Watts in 1859. There is no doubt the Church flourished during his incumbency and there are records of numerous functions being held on behalf of the Church in the grounds of Picton Castle. It is said that he too, changed his name to Philipps, but during the period he was Vicar of St. Mary's until his death on Dec. 3rd 1875 he was known as the Rev. Gwyther. He had two daughters the eldest being Mary Philippa who also changed her name to Philipps. In 1868 seven years before her fathers death, she married Charles Edward Gregg Fisher of Springdale, Huddersfield. He was educated at Cheltenham College and New College Oxford and was by profession an engineer. He came to Picton Castle to live in 1875 on his wife inheriting the estates upon the death of her father. He then later changed his name to Philipps and was later created a Baronet in his own right.

Love Steven 26th December 1636 the sonne of Robert Love Smith was baptised on St Steven day St Mary's Church Register Haverfordwest

Love Stephen and Deborah 1650 London Puritan Preacher Londoner Stephen sometimes spelt Steven Love and his wife Deborah arrived in Pembrokeshire. He had been appointed to the living of Cosheston, the Rector of which at that time was Peregrine Phillips, as a result of his work with the Propagation Committee. I could find no evidence that he had taken Holy Orders. He would have lived in the Rectory just down from the Church which is now the site of a private house. The area was just recovering from the effects of the second Civil War but in that year Tenby was visited by an even greater disaster. In the town an outbreak of plague had occurred. Haverfordwest records show that there was a house to house collection in the town for the relief of the sick and distressed in Tenby. How many died we do not know but the Mayor of Tenby gave a shilling for a shroud for each poor person and it is recorded that that sum came to 113 shillings. 113 poor people died how many more affluent townsfolk died as well? The next year a ship arrived and berthed at Haverfordwest. To avoid being quarantined it is believed to have anchored in the Haven down near the present site of the Cleddeau bridge. The bodies of several young seamen wrapped in their hammocks were hastily buried in the mud below the high tide Mark. So hastily that one had a coin of 1650 buried with him. It is believed that they died from bubonic plague. These bodies were found during the construction of the Cleddeau Bridge This ship which berthed in October 1651 is believed to have carried the plague to Haverfordwest as in the first nine months after that 207 people died of it. A tenth of the town's population.

Meanwhile in 1651 Stephen Love had been moved from Cosheston to St Thomas 's Church Haverfordwest as, according to records, Puritan Rector and on May 13th 1652 "Love Stephen Cleric? "Minister of the Gospel was appointed Vicar of St Mary 's" He and his wife worked unceasingly to help the victims while many of the town authority and Merchant' s fled. HW Corp MS 584 1

Mends William Bowen Admiral

Born in Haverfordwest Pembrokeshire on 27 January 1781, one of a large family of whom fourteen joined either the Navy or Army, most of them being killed in the French Wars. British Prime Minister Lord Palmerston spoke of the family as a race of warriors." He entered the Navy in 1794, fifteen years after his brother Robert. Both had three sons all of whom became naval officers and constituted a galaxy of Mends in the Navy Lists of the 19th Century.

Admiral William Bowen Mends served for 62 years on the active list. He was involved in a notable cutting out expedition in Vigo Bay in 1800 for which he gained early promotion and the congratulations of his commander-in-chief. The next year he was in Nelson's costly and unsuccessful attack on Boulogne. He was 35 years a post captain before receiving his flag in 1849. He died a full admiral at Devonport in 1863 aged 83.

Mends William Robert, Admiral Sir of Haverfordwest was born in 1812 eldest son William Bowen Mends and was educated at Haverfordwest Grammar School which he loathed. He was sent off to a naval preparatory school at Devonport taking passage round in the frigate HMS Nereus which had been launched at Pembroke Dockyard in July 1821. His Long and distinguished career included being wrecked on Cape Frio in Brazil in 1830 in the Pembroke built frigate HMS Thetis which was carrying a Fortune in gold bullion and his command of another Pembroke-built frigate, HMS Arethusa, in the Russian War. He died at Portsmouth on 26 June 1897, the day of Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee review off the Fleet

William Nichol Very little is known about this Martyr of Queen Mary 's persecution who was burned to death near St Mary 's Church in Haverfordwest. I could find no records – it is as if the town after the event wanted to forget it. reading Foxe's Book of Martyrs I can understand why.

"William Nichol of Haverfordwest, Wales was a person of humble estate and very simple in intellect, yet, lightly gifted as he was, he knew the necessity of holding fast the blessed hope of eternal life and that the path to this blessed possession lay through the Gospel. He was taken up for reprobating the practices of the worshippers of the antichrist and April 9th 1558 bore testimony to the truth at Haverfordwest, in Wales, by enduring the fire.

Had the sanguinary bigots of Rome possessed the least bowels of compassion the imbecility of this martyr might have stepped in to save him. Unlike the Redeemer, who came into the world to SAVE, their delight to DESTROY. Should the Deity mete out to them, at the bar of judgement, the measures they have bestowed on the persecuted protestants, then will the distinction be realized which Dives experienced when in hell he lifted up his eyes, and beheld afar off Lazarus in Abraham's bosom-----“ Now he is comforted, but thou art tormented” Foxe's Book of Martyrs 1563

I did find that at least memorials have been erected on the site before the road widening which has necessitated a memorial near but not marking the actual site

These stones have been preserved at Dale Castle and I quote J Wiles 03.09.04 ---rounded boulder 50in high 20in by 7in. Once stood in Haverfordwest SM95251560, to Mark the site of the martyrdom of William Nichol 1558.

2. A red sandstone pillar, 1.2m high by 0.5m by 0.2m, bearing undefinable marks said to be remaining traces of an early Christian inscribed cross, now flaked away the stone previously stood at the High Street & Dark Street intersection, Haverfordwest, & is said to have marked the site of W. Nichol's execution by burning. Removed to current site, 1840-8 a feature of Dale Castle grounds

Phillips Sir Charles Edward Gregg of Picton Castle, Baronet. Died 1924 Sir Charles, as he was known in Haverfordwest, was Lord Lieutenant of the ancient town and County and for a time Lord Lieutenant of the County of Pembroke. He served for a short time as a Member of Parliament and was Mayor of the borough on a number of occasions. Picton Castle during his residence became a veritable community, the number of servants running into three figures. He was a familiar figure in the town riding in his carriage with a coachman and a footman on the box. It was his young daughter Mabel who died as a result of a tragic accident upon the Narberth Rd in 1893. The Christmas of 1908 was an old fashioned one with heavy snow. The account in the local paper at the time sets out details of this festive occasion when Sir Charles and Lady Philipps entertained all the servants on the estate to a dinner and concert to which also were invited all the tenantry from the farms around. For a number of years prior to his death in 1924 he suffered a painful illness requiring the constant attention of two male nurses.

Picton Thomas Sir Lieutenant General G.C.B.

[Originally I envisage this piece taking me a very short time as I already had information from Pembrokeshire authors especially those writing on Haverfordwest but I was wrong (again)]

The picture that I always had of Thomas Picton was that of a smartly dressed military gentleman as portrayed in the picture by Snee and in the History of Haverfordwest by Brown but then when looking up the portrait of Sir Thomas I came across Faces of Wales on the National Museums of Wales Web site where, in the information attached to the portrait I found “Sir Thomas Picton was born in Poyston, Pembrokeshire and joined the army in 1771. A life-Long soldier, he saw action in the American War of Independence, served in the West Indies and became a somewhat controversial Governor of Trinidad. He was described as a 'rough foul-mouthed devil' by Wellington who also conceded that he 'always behaved extremely well; no man could do better in the difficult services I assigned him'” A very different picture and is it accurate as I cannot find any evidence that he actually saw action in the American War of Independence.

Brown in his History of Haverfordwest late in the 19th century gives the picture I have always accepted. “He states that what is now the "Dragon Hotel" in Hill Street was then the town house of the Langharne family of Orlandon and that General Picton's mother was staying there as a member of a house party. It is further added that a dance took place in which the good lady took part, whereupon she was suddenly taken ill and the future great soldier and national hero was born. In later years he resided at Poyston near the town which had for generations been the home of the Pictons, and went out into the Hayfield to bid the Haymakers farewell before he left for Waterloo”. To me the picture of a country squire and soldier telling his workers that he was going to do his duty. There is no mention in Brown's book of other events which shed a different light on the man. But he was not living at Poyston when he left for Waterloo.

There seems always to have been doubt about where he was born.

I always understood the Haverfordwest was his birth place going by various histories of the town that I have Read and this is confirmed by the entry in A Topographical Dictionary of Wales (1839) by Lewis which states, under Rudbaxton, “Lieutenant-General Sir Thomas Picton, G.C.B., (Knight Grand Cross of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath) who fell in the battle of Waterloo, is generally supposed to have been a native of the parish, but, really, was born at Haverfordwest; the family mansion, Poyston, being in course of erection at the time.”

However the Faces of Wales Web Site and other recent articles all suggest Poyston as his birth place. A biography of Sir Thomas entitled Memoirs of Lieutenant General Sir Thomas Picton GCB including his Correspondence from the originals in the possession of his Family by H B Robinson publishes in 1835 uses information and documents provided by Sir Thomas’s brother, the Rev Edward Picton of Iscoed near Ferryside Carmarthenshire and states that “Thomas Picton was born in the month of August 1758, at the residence of his father Thomas Picton esq.. of Poyston in the county of Pembroke. Thomas was a younger brother”

As Brown’s account is second hand told him by Mr. Win. John, J. P., Merchant of Quay Street, and an old inhabitant. I am forced to accept that of Rev Edward Picton. There is though the problem that Brown states his father was John Picton esq.. of Poyston (Sir Thomas Picton G.C.B. was the second son of John Picton esq.. of Poyston) while H B Robinson presumably quoting Rev Edward Picton says the father was Thomas Picton esq.. Someone once said – It is a wise man who knows his own father.

As part of his education before entering the army, which was his ambition, he went to a military academy run by a Frenchman and at the age of 13 in December 1771 he became an ensign in the 12th Regiment of Foot commanded by his uncle Lieutenant Colonel William Picton. The date of his first Commission appears as 22nd January 1772 and his name appeared in the Gazette as appointed Ensign to the 12th Regiment of Foot in February 1772.

The Regiment was on garrison duties at Gibraltar when Ensign Picton left the military academy and joined it two years after being commissioned. While there he made many trips into Spain learning the language. Another pastime of his was studying the various fortifications of Gibraltar. In March 1777 was promoted to Lieutenant in the 12th Foot and in January 1778 the influence of his uncle enabled him to obtain a transfer to the Seventy Fifth of Prince of Wales Regiment of Foot where he was gazetted Captain and had to leave Gibraltar to serve in England.

He spent the next five years on garrison duty in England until the Regiment was disbanded at Bristol in 1783 after the American War of Independence. As the senior officer present he had to Read the notice out. The men were assembled in College Green Square when he Read out the instructions he had received. At first there was only a little discontent displayed but then the men refused to surrender their arms or obey the orders of their Officers. There were several other Regiments and the town authorities were very worried that this discontent and mutiny would spread. Officers of the 75th were threatened with violence but then Captain Picton drew his sword and pushed into the centre of the mutinous men and caught hold of the ringleader dragging him out to where some non commissioned Officers could put him under arrest. The rest of the men were persuaded to disperse “by the Torrent of Billingsgate language” used by Captain Picton. A report of the matter was made to the War Office and to the King who commended him for “the courage and true military spirit he displayed in quelling the mutiny in the Seventy Fifth Regiment” Field Marshall Conway also promised him the first vacant majority but this was not to be which angered him.

Captain Picton was on the half pay list of Captains for twelve years and spent that time at the family home of Poyston; according to his brother, the Rev Edward Picton in “the enjoyment of the sports of the field, in studying the classics, but more particularly in perfecting himself in the art of war” (Memoirs of Lieutenant General Sir Thomas Picton GCB)

In February 1793 came the start of the Napoleonic war, Captain Picton repeatedly wrote to the War Office hoping for an appointment but always received the same polite replies and assurances. According to his brother he soon became convinced “that interest and nothing but interest, would obtain for him his wishes. Of this he had not much”. He had no friends at Court who could procure a post for him and he became a little bitter.

After trying to no avail for a year to get an appointment towards the end of 1794 he sailed for the West Indies. Although he had no appointment but he did know Sir John Vaughan the Commander in Chief slightly. Sir John’s family lived at Trawsgoed (Crosswood) Cardigan. The eldest son was Wilmot Vaughan earl of Lisburne (created 1776). The second son was Lieutenant General Sir John Vaughan (1748-95) KB. He had served previously in Germany, America and then in the West Indies as commander-in-chief. Sir John made him his aide-de-camp and gave him a captaincy in the 17th Foot. Sir John was pleased with the way that Captain Picton carried out his duties and promoted him to a majority with the Sixty Eighth regiment as well as appointing him deputy quarter master general which entitled him to the brevet rank of Lieutenant Colonel. It is to be remembered that promotion was quick in the West Indies as so many military personnel died of fevers. According to Geggus, Slavery, War and revolution 1982 more than 45,000 British Soldiers died in the Caribbean during the 1790’s mainly from disease.

Shortly after in 1795 Sir John became sick and in August died on Martinique. Major Picton carried on as deputy quarter master general until replaced by General Knox and he then considered returning to England. While he was making arrangements he was ordered by General Leigh who was the senior officer in the area to assist with arrangements to welcome Sir Ralph Abercrombie who had been appointed to replace Sir John Vaughan. Sir Ralph although he did not know Major Picton did know his uncle who had served under him and who requested Major Picton to serve under him as volunteer aid-de-camp at the attack and capture of St Lucia. At the conclusion of the capture Sir Ralph Abercrombie issued a public order which stated “All orders coming through Lieutenant-Colonel Picton shall be considered as the orders of the commander-in-chief”, and he was appointed Lieutenant-Colonel of the 56th Regiment. On the 7th June he was in the force that accompanied Sir Ralph to attack St Vincent which capitulated after a short period of resistance.

Colonel Picton then accompanied Sir Ralph to Martinique from where they sailed to England in the Arethusa. After a two months stay in England, Sir Ralph accompanied by Colonel Picton returned to the west Indies arriving at Martinique in January 1797.

Shortly after their return an attack on Trinidad was organised. The Spanish were expecting an attack and besides the fortifications had reinforced the island with four ships of the line and several frigates which were moored in the harbour under the defence batteries. During the night of the 16/17th of February there was a fire on one of the Spanish ships which quickly spread destroying them all except for one ship of the line which was captured by the British boats. The following day after the British troops had landed and marched into Puerto de Espagna the island was surrendered to the British forces.

Almost Sir Ralph's first action was to appoint Colonel Picton governor and Commandant of the island. Sir Ralph sailed on 25th February leaving Colonel Picton in command with a small garrison and instructions regarding Justice on the island for him and John Nicholls who he appointed chief judge and auditor. According to the instructions the Spanish laws that had previously been used in the island were still to be used.

To Colonel Picton he gave some additional instructions.

"I have placed you in a trying and delicate situation,- nor, to give you a chance to overcome the difficulties opposed to you can I leave you a strong garrison: but I shall give you ample powers: execute Spanish law as well as you can; do justice according to your conscience, and that is all that can be expected from you. His Majesty's government will be minutely informed of your situation, and no doubt, will make all due allowances"

Picton was left with what he considered a totally inadequate garrison 300 men of the Fifty Seventh Regiment, about 100 of Hompesch's detachment. These were all foreigners and Picton had little confidence in them, twenty Artillery men and a hundred of locally recruited French Negro's.

There was within days a problem with Hompesch's detachment and about ten deserted but the offer of a reward of sixteen dollars for their apprehension or death resulted in the capture of five and another one who had suffered the consequence of his actions. In the British army desertion in time of war was always (right up until WW1) punishable by death. Picton had been authorised by Sir Ralph to execute the most extreme civil and military punishments without reference to any tribunal. This was not unusual as looters and deserters when caught in the Peninsular War were hanged from the nearest beam or tree. The other five were sent to Sir Ralph.

The island was under constant threat of attack and a French schooner with some small boats was attacking the shipping. It was impossible to maintain garrisons at vulnerable points and use the troops for policing as well so Picton formed a militia of local inhabitants to assist with policing and defence. Within just over one month of his appointment he was able to write to Sir Ralph on April 4th to say that "A very exact police has been established in the town and is gradually extending itself over the whole island. We are getting through the press of undecided processes as fast as we can. The colony is everywhere quiet, and the inhabitants pay prompt obedience to the orders of government”.

In November there was an attempt by the coloured inhabitants of Trinidad to bring about a revolution. Many of them were French. They were to be reinforced by refugees who had collected arms and ammunition on a near island and sailed to join their friends. Colonel Picton sent a force against them and their arms, stores and homes were destroyed. The leaders on Trinidad were arrested and according to Colonel Picton “by the immediate execution of one of the principles and the imprisonment of several others the remainder were overawed and led to see the futility of their designs”

According to “Brutality of Picton past examined BBC News 20th March 2007” He then introduced new very harsh slave Laws which increased the number of lashes of the whip a slave could be given from twenty five to thirty nine, they would also receive twenty five lashes for breaking the nine o’clock curfew and they were no longer allowed to have Saturday off. Any owner who allowed this would be punished also. For minor criminal offences the first time they would slit the slave’s nose and the second cut the ears off. Torture, beheadings and hangings were common the program records. Picton himself had invested in both slaves and land to the extent of between £80,000 and £100000 (Maitland Papers)

There was no doubt however of the Government approval. In March 1798 he received a letter from the Right Hon. H Dundas saying “his Majesty had been graciously pleased in consideration of the extraordinary expense attending the civil and military command of the island, to order that an allowance of one thousand two hundred pounds per annum should be made to the commandant with authority to charge that sum against the revenues of the island”

Admiral Harvey commanding the west Indies fleet sent some small vessels at the beginning of 1799 to destroy the batteries and vessels which were harassing the trade from Trinidad to the annoyance of the Governors of the nearby Spanish colonies. They put a price on Picton’s head of 20,000 dollars. Colonel Picton’s reply was to invite them to come and try to take his head.

In 1801 June 29th Colonel Picton received another letter from Lord Hobarth announcing his Majesty’s confirmation of the Governorship of Trinidad. It also stated “The ability and zeal which you have shown in administering the affairs of the island of Trinidad and the honourable testimony borne to your conduct by the Commander in chief of his Majesty’s forces in the Leeward and Windward Charibee Islands on every occasion have induced his Majesty to appoint you to the civil government of that island ; and I have the satisfaction of enclosing herewith your commission and the instructions under his Majesty’s sign manual for your guidance in executing the duties of that office”. He was at the same time notified that the Courts of Judicature which existed before the capitulation should be continued in the exercise of all the judicial powers belonging to them in criminal and civil cases, and that he was vested with all such judicial powers as belonged to his predecessors, and should exercise them in like manner as they were exercised previously. His predecessors were Spanish using Spanish laws

Later that year, on October 22nd 1801 Colonel Picton’s promotion to Brigadier General was promulgated in the Gazette.

Shortly after there was a change of government in England. William Pitt resigned and was succeeded by Henry Addington, who made peace with Napoleonic France. War was soon resumed however. This government was not favorable to the previous government's policy of colonial administration. A letter was sent to General Picton dated July 9th 1802 stating that His Majesty has thought it expedient to place the government of the island in Commission; judging that, from the union of civil, military, and naval talents combined in the persons selected for this service, advantages must arise which cannot be expected from the labours of any one individual. The experience of your conduct from the time the island was first placed under your charge has induced his majesty to select you as one of the persons to whom this important trust shall be confided". Then follows the list of Commissioners in order of authority.

- 1) William Fullerton esq.. Colonel in the Indian army
- 2) Samuel Hood, Captain in His Majesty's navy
- 3) Thomas Picton, Brigadier General.

This meant that although Brigadier General Picton who was a career soldier was senior in rank to Colonel Fullerton he had to take orders from him. As well Colonel Fullerton had only been awarded the rank because he had raised a regiment to fight in the American War of Independence and then in India. Fullerton who had studied at Edinburgh University had been a junior diplomat. He came from a wealthy land owning family and was a Whig Member of Parliament and as such had the ears of many in the newly formed Government especially Lord Hobart the new Secretary of State for the Colonies who agreed with the views that Fullerton had expressed in his pamphlet arguing against the East India Company's policy with regard to the native people and princes of "Let them hate so Long as they fear" (The policy adopted by my Flt Sgt at Square Bashing Bridgenorth 1957) At this time reports from Trinidad had led to humanitarians in England and disgruntled merchants on Trinidad of the authoritarian governorship of Picton seeking his removal. Colonel Fullerton procured the appointment of a commission to govern the island of which he would be senior member to prove the theories he had set out in his pamphlet. Fullerton came to Trinidad to find that Picton's policies were totally at variance with his views. Picton of course had no "friends at Court" and was just the second son of a country squire. In Trinidad Picton, according to P. F. McCallum's Travels in Trinidad after consorting with several native women, had formed a relationship with Rosette Smith a young married lady of 21 whom he installed in his quarters as his mistress. She was awarded the fuel contract for the British forces on the island which gave her a good income. Thomas Smith a British Merchant on Trinidad wrote to Lord Hobart complaining about her influence on Justice in the island. Hobart Papers, D/MH M93, Smith to Lord Hobart, Trinidad, September 1, 1802.

It was not unusual as the Church Baptismal records for the Port of Spain show for British Officers and officials to form a relationship with native women but this was something that met with Mrs Fullerton's total disapproval.

Colonel Fullerton wrote in a letter to Mr Sullivan that "I was received by General Picton with great politeness and with all the attention which Lord Hobart had been pleased to direct" but this cordiality did not last Long as on the 12th February prior to the arrival of Captain Hood, Colonel Fullerton demanded in council that " There be produced certified statements of all the criminal proceedings which have taken place since the commencement of the late government ; together with a list , specifying every individual of whatever country , colour or condition who had been imprisoned , banished, fettered flogged , burned or otherwise punished ; also specifying the dates of their respective commitments , trial sentence , period of confinement, punishments, and of all those who had died in prison” and on his first visit to the prison at Port of Spain, the executioner presented Fullerton with his bill of accounts, listing all punishments carried out at St. Joseph; PRO, CO 295/5.

This was a direct slur on the administration of Governor Picton and 22nd February 2003 on the arrival of Captain Hood he resigned. Within six months of the arrival of Colonel Fullerton on Trinidad he had laid charges with the Privy Council against General Picton for instituting a reign of terror using the list obtained from the jailer as evidence. Shortly after Captain Sir Samuel also resigned and in his letter to Earl Camden, Secretary of State for the Colonial Department he accuses Mr Fullerton of making false statements, using his wife to collect evidence and to try get Captain Hood to support her Husband. He concludes by writing “I shall conclude this in saying, the upright and just measures adopted by the late governor saved the island; and I rest assured his character cannot be spoken of too highly, or traduced by the artful measures of an old intriguing politician”. Shortly after the Commissioner Government system advocated by Fullerton was found to be totally incompetent to carry out the administration of the island and Lieutenant General Hislop was appointed as Lieutenant Governor on the recall of the Commissioners.

According the Chronological History of the west Indies by Southey written soon after the events Brigadier General Picton was presented with a sword by the people of Trinidad on his resigning as their governor and leaving the island on the 23rd April 1803. Picton went to Barbados where General Grinfield enlisted his help in retaking the islands of St Lucia and Tobago. When Colonel Fullerton found out he was very critical of General Grinfield and accused him of only employing Brigadier General Picton as he was a good friend of Commander Sir Samuel Hood. On June 21st the attack on St Lucia took place with General Grinfield and Commander Hood in command. Brigadier General Picton commanded the Sixty eighth regiment which was in reserve. The Island was recaptured the next day. The 30th June the attack on Tobago was launched with Brigadier general Picton heading the advance column which advanced as soon as landed. General Berthier commanding the French garrison quickly surrendered. According the dispatch of General Grinfield “the French garrison marched out with the honours of war laying down their arms after passing the guard of honour under the command of Brigadier General Picton. The general orders state “The advance March of the first column consisting of two companies of the Sixty-fourth regiment and five companies of the Third west India regiment under Brigadier general Picton which was in all probability the cause of the speedy surrender is entitled to military commendation”. General Grinfield then appointed Brigadier General Picton as commandant of the island of Tobago but shortly afterwards Picton had to leave for England as he had been informed that Fullerton and his supporters had already arrived there and laid thirty six criminal charges against him.

In October Picton arrived in London to find that Fullerton was conducting a pamphlet campaign against him detailing the charges and enlisting his Whig supporters and the general public to force the Government to hold an inquiry into the allegations.

In December 1803 he was arrested by order of the Privy Council and promptly released on bail set at £40,000 (Picton much to Fullerton's surprise was able to give surety for half of this; two west Indies plantation owners covered the remainder. Fullerton had hoped to see him confined in Newgate prison). Although Privy Council's hearings were held in secret Fullerton ensured that the majority of the documents and information presented at WhiteHall found their way into print

The charges were considered by the Privy Council and although Fullerton had submitted charges of excessive cruelty, and executions, to Fullerton's dismay only one was consider for future proceedings. The Privy Council had taken into consideration Picton's argument that either thE Laws of Trinidad - then still thE Laws of the former Spanish colonial power - or 'the state of the garrison' justified the immediate execution in the cases specified. Fullerton was desperate to enforce the views he had expressed in his pamphlet on the treatment of the native population and determined to ruin Picton who he considered had thwarted his plans for the Commission to govern Trinidad.

The one case to be considered at a trial at the King's Bench was a misdemeanour of having signed the order for the torture of Luisa Calderon a young free mulatto who was alleged to have assisted one of her lovers to steal from the house of the man she was living with. Picton was charged under 42 G III, c. 58, the Criminal Justice Act, providing that any person in His Majesty's service abroad who commits an offense in exercise of his official duties may be tried in England. There was a considerable delay before this trial as information had to be obtained from Trinidad which was applied for in a mandamus in 1804 returnable at Michaelmas 1805 and the trial did not take place till 24th February 1806. The original warrant was based on the oaths and depositions of Luise Calderon, Raphael Shando, Pedro Vargas and Juan Montes brought to England by Fullerton, but when the mandamus arrived back suggested their depositions were not to be relied upon "Luise Calderon lived with a man to whom she was inconstant and whom she ultimately became an accomplice in robbing.

Raphael Shando once convicted of stealing and sent to the galleys, "and not to be believed on his oath"

Pedro Vargas swore he was a Spanish lawyer, (and was accordingly brought forward to explain the Spanish laws at the trial but his evidence was so full of prevarications and falsehood that the judge was upon the point of committing him for wilful and corrupt perjury).

Juan Montes, a deserter from the Havannah and generally believed in Trinidad to be a spy to the Spanish government"

Meanwhile in 1804 The Whig government of Henry Addington who had advocated peace with Napoleon was replace by William Pitt and Fullerton lost much of his power base.

But Fullerton was not satisfied. He laid a criminal indictment against General Picton "For the application of torture to extort confession from Luise Calderon, a girl under fourteen years of age, respecting a robbery supposed to have been committed by Carlos Gonzales against Pedro Ruiz, stated to have been frequently employed as an agent by General Picton which accusation he repeated in his pamphlet William Fullerton, A Refutation of the Pamphlet which Colonel Picton lately addressed to Lord Hobart(London, 1805),

Eventually the trial was held in the court of the King's Bench on the 24th of February 1806 when Picton was charged with with "inflicting torture, in order to extort confession of Luise Calderon, one of his Majesty's subjects in the island of Trinidad, in the west Indies. According to the prosecution statement "In December, 1801, when this crime was perpetrated, Louisa Calderon was of the tender age of ten or eleven years. At that early period she had been induced to live with a person of the name of Pedro Ruiz, as his mistress;" "While she lived with Ruiz she was engaged in an intrigue with Carlos Gonzalez, the pretended friend of the former, who robbed him of a quantity of dollars. Gonzalez was apprehended, and she also, as some suspicion fell upon her in consequence of the affair. She was taken before the justice; she denied having any concern in the business The magistrate felt that his powers were at an end; this officer of justice resorted to General Picton; and I have to produce, in the handwriting of the defendant,

"Appliquez la question A Luise Calderon

T H Picton"

(In English)

Apply the Question to Luise Calderon

The method of Questioning used was one described as "piqueting" used in the British army as a punishment in which the prisoner was suspended by one elbow from a beam and the other arm and opposite ankle secured together behind the prisoners back. The other foot was allowed to rest on wooden stake "with its end cut to a round and blunt point."

This questioning lasted the first time for just over fifty minutes and Luise Calderon confessed but she did not reveal what had happened to the money her lover accomplice had taken so she was questioned using the same method the next day for twenty four minutes. Under English law at the time she would have been hanged but she was just held in prison for eighteen months and then, just before Fullerton arrived, released.

Influence on the jury was made by the display of the water colour drawing of the young half naked girl being suspended and questioned. There was also the question as to whether Governor Picton was acting under English Law or Spanish Law but the Court believed after assurances by Pedro Vargas the alleged Spanish Lawyer provided as a witness to the Court by Fullerton that torture was not allowed in Spain. General Picton was found Guilty but immediately appealed on the grounds that he was acting under Spanish Law and Spanish Law did allow torture.

("The question of torment is to be applied for confirmation and proof, there not being sufficient"
Curia Philipica

"And in the same crimes for which the torment is applied to the delinquent, in case an evidence is of low vile character and bad morals is admitted the delinquent is to testify under torment; otherwise the evidence is of no validity" Law de Partida)

Also torture of slaves was permitted in most of the British west Indies, as indeed was their summary execution for a number of reasons- for example having attempted to resist arrest and stealing.

The case was retried in the King's Bench and it found torture to be legal in Trinidad at the cession of the island to Britain, and Picton not to have been influenced by malice against Calderon "Independent of the illegality of the act" as based on British law.

Fullerton was dismayed at the verdict as the crusade he had waged was defeated. He died in 1808. was was dismayed at the verdict and General Picton meanwhile had been presented to the King at Court by Lord Castlereagh, Secretary of State for the War and Colonial Department (The Times May 29th 1807)

In the Gazette of the 25th of April 1808 the announcement was made of his promotion to Major General
He was appointed to the staff of John Pitt; Lord Chatham the Commander in Chief of the Walcheren expedition in July 1809 and after the capture of Flushing on August 15th was appointed Governor of the town. Unfortunately this expedition was a failure as the British Forces began to caught malaria as much of the low-lying land was fever ridden. Twenty percent of the army was suffering within one month. Nearly 4000 died of the disease and many others were still seriously ill a year later. The expedition was called off in September but some forces stayed on till December. Major General Picton though had caught malaria and was returned to England by ship with other patients. Eventually he spent some time a Cheltenham and then Bath to recover.

He was still recovering when in early 1810 he was ordered to join Lord Wellington's staff in Portugal. The headquarters of Wellington's army was at Viseu and General Picton was immediately appointed to command the Third Division which consisted of the 1st Battalion of the 45th Regiment; 74 Regiment; 1st Battalion of the 88th Regiment; 5th Regiment; 2nd Battalion of the 58th Regiment; 83rd Regiment; and the 1st Company of the 5th Battalion of the 60th Regiment. They were quartered around Celereco. He was for the remainder of the Peninsular War one of Wellington's principle Generals although according to the 1911 Edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica he was never to have the "confidence that he gave to Beresford Hill and Craufurd" His division was near to Craufurd's division when they became involved in action at Coa on July 24th 1810 but Picton refused to support Craufurd as Wellington had specifically ordered they were to avoid and engagement saying "not desirous of engaging in an affair beyond the Coa." CrauFord had been surprised by a far superior force under Marshall Ney but instead of following the orders of Wellington and retreat across the river Craufurd engaged and was fortunate to narrowly avoid disaster. At Busaco shortly after on the 27th September Pictons division was one of those drawn up on the ridge when the French attacked. Picton used the ridge top road to move his men and when the French reached the ridge they were met with the concentrated fire of the 88th and 45th Foot with two Portuguese Battalions in a concave line. The French were not able to form up into line because of the intensity of the fire and fled Picton then moved some of his men along the ridge to help repel an attack by General Foy. Again the French were driven off the ridge.

Wellington then withdrew his forces for the Winter to the lines at Torres Vedras.

Between the 3rd and 5th of May 1811 the French tried to relieve the siege on Almeida. Wellington decided to stop the French advance at a little town Fuenter d' Onor. The first attack on the town by the French was beaten off but then the French General DRouet launched a second attack and forced the British to fall back until the French had seized almost the whole town. Wellington ordered units from the 1st and Picton's 3rd Division with the Portuguese 6th to drive the French out of the town, which they did.

Picton was appointed to the local rank of Lieutenant General in September and the 3rd Division won great glory by its rapid and orderly retirement under severe pressure from the French cavalry at El Bodon.

In October Picton was appointed to the colonelcy of the 77th Regiment but that month also he heard of the death of his Uncle of whom he was very fond at the age of 84 and from the reply he wrote to his brother it was evident he was very distressed.

With the New Year came the storming of the breaches of Ciudad Rodrigo. The British attack opened on January 8th with the taking of the Greater Teson and on January 16th the lesser Teson. Then on the night of the 19th Lieutenant General Picton, 3rd Division attacked the larger of the breaches losing men to the two Cannon which the defenders had mounted in the breach but finally overcoming the defense while Major General Craufurd's Light Division attacked the smaller breach. In this attack Major General Craufurd and Major General Mackinnon were killed. Major General Mackinnon when a mine exploded in the larger breach. He was initially buried in that breach but his body was later moved.

The next major action was in March 16th 1812 when Wellington started siege operations against Badajoz which was heavily defended. It was not until April that breaches had been made in the walls which gave hope of a successful attack although there were strong defenses behind them which would still have to be overcome. Two divisions assaulted these breaches on April 6th while Picton's 3rd Division attacked the Castle and part of the undamaged wall by escalade. This attack was not really expected to have any hope of success but would divert part of the garrison from the real points of attack. The attacks on the breaches were repeated for over five hours unsuccessfully but the Picton's 3rd Division had successfully captured the Castle and the part of the undamaged wall the ladders against which Picton, who had been wounded in the groin, was encouraging more men to use to get into the town.

In a debate in the House of Lords on the 27th April 1812 Lord Liverpool said "The conduct of General Picton has inspired a confidence in the army, and exhibited an example of science and bravery, which has been surpassed by no other officer. His Exertions in the attack on the 6th cannot fail to excite the most lively feelings of admiration."

Meanwhile Picton was ill with a severe fever as well as problems with the injury he had received at Badajoz. At one time it was thought he would die. Command of the 3rd Division was transferred to General Pakenham. On the advice of the doctors Picton returned to England and to convalesce at Cheltenham and then he visited Wales.

In 1813 Picton was determined to return to rejoin his old command but before he could leave England his Royal Highness the Prince Regent created him a Knight of the Bath and he was invested at Carlton House on 1st Feb 1813. He returned to the Peninsular War in April 1813. Soon after his return Picton who had previously held only the local acting rank of Lieutenant-General was on the 4th of June promoted to the substantive rank of Lieutenant General.

At the Battle of Vitoria on the 21st June, Wellington attacked in 4 columns and after a hard fight General Picton's 3rd Division were able to cross to the south side of the river breaking the French centre. According to Picton his force was pounded by 40 to 50 French Cannon but they held.

Thanks of the House to Sir Thomas Picton.

HC Deb 11 November 1813 vol 27 cc81-381

Sir Thomas Picton, knight of the most honourable order of the Bath, being come to the House, Mr. Speaker acquainted him with the Resolutions of the House of the 7th of July last, and of the 8th instant, respecting his services in the battle of Vittoria, and in the subsequent operations of the allied armies in Spain; and Mr. Speaker gave him the Thanks of the House accordingly, as followeth:

"Lieutenant-general Sir Thomas Picton;

"In this House your name has been Long since enrolled amongst these who have obtained the gratitude of their country for distinguished military services; and we, this day, rejoice to see you amongst us, claiming again the tribute of our thanks for fresh exploits and achievements.

"Wherever the history of the peninsular war shall be related, your name will be found amongst the foremost in that race of glory; by your sword the British troops were led on to the victorious assault of Crodad Rodrigo; by your daring hand the British standard was planted upon the Castle of Badajoz, when the usurper of the Spanish throne who driven to make his last stand at Vittoria, your battalions med the centre of that formidable line, before which the veteran troops of France fled in terror and dismay; and by your skill, prudence, and valour, exerted in a critical hour, the enemy was foiled in his desperate attempt to break through the Barrier of the Pyrenees and raise the blockade of Pampluna.

"For the deeds of Vittoria and the Pyrenees, this double harvest of glory in one year, the House of Commons has resolved again to give you the tribute of its thanks; and I do therefore now, in the name and by the command of the Commons of the united kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in parliament assembled, deliver to you their unanimous thanks for your great exertions upon the 21st of June last near Vittoria, when the French army was completely defeated by the allied forces under the marquis of Wellington's command;

"And also, for the valour, steadiness, and exertion, so successfully displayed by you in repelling the repeated attacks made on the position of the allied army by the whole French forces under the command of Marshal Soult between the 25th July and 1st of August last."

In early 1814 but declined the command of the British forces on the side of Catalonia he served with Wellington till the final victory over France.

At the end of the Peninsular War the 3rd Division was broke up and many of the Regiments sent to America. The officers of the Division (with the exception of those of one Regiment) gave General Picton a valuable service of plate.

For his services the House of Commons gave him their grateful thanks (for the seventh time). Many Generals were raised to the peerage but General Picton was not among them. There was a suspicion that it was the court case that had come to haunt him.

General Picton then retired to his estates at Iscoed near Ferryside in Carmarthenshire and spent his time attending to his estate and devising plans for the improvement of the surrounding area. His health was not good but although he did not pledge allegiance to any political party, was very active in carrying out his parliamentary duties to the benefit of his constituents and country.

Early in 1815 he was elevated to Knight Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath but despite his Long service for the realm this was the last honour which was conferred upon him or his family

He was not allowed to spend much time at home as Napoleon returned from exile in Elba

Iscoed 26th May 1815

My dear Tyler (his aide de camp)

You must get ready as soon as you can; and you will be so good as to communicate to Captains Chambers and Price that I have received orders for Flanders.

Look out for some active horses, not above fifteen hands; but do not purchase without the opinion of Mr price who I dare say will give you all the assistance in his power. I shall bring up the old horse and the mare, and there is one in London. Three others will be about my mark. I shall be in town during the course of the next week.

Yours Faithfully

Th. Picton

Carmarthen 26th May 1815

Captain Tyler, 93rd Regiment

Davies Street, Berkeley Street, London

On June 11th he and Captain Tyler left London and that evening dined at the Fountain Tavern in Canterbury. The dinner was given to them as a Mark of respect by some of the people of the town.

They sailed from Dover the next day and arrived at Ostend on the 13th and Brussels on the 15th. General Picton was immediately appointed to command the reserve consisting of ten thousand men but it was understood that his particular command was the Fifth Division consisting of the 8th Brigade, 9th Brigade, and the Hanoverian 5th Brigade; a total of 6,815 men.

On the 16th General Picton and the 5th Division left Brussels for Quatre Bras and General Picton when he heard of the sound of the guns at Quatre Bras pushed his Division forward and were the first to arrive to reinforce the Prince of Orange. As soon as the Fifth Division and the Brunswickers had taken up position they were attacked from French artillery and the French infantry who were met with a rolling fire from Picton's Division. The French infantry were beaten off but then the French cavalry charged and the division formed squares and beat the cavalry off. Picton then ordered a charge leading it himself and drove the French from their positions.

Wellington then appointed Picton to command all the British Forces at Quatre Bras while he liaised with Blucher

On the 17th Wellington ordered the whole of his forces to assemble at Waterloo where he felt the major battle would be. That night the forces were in position but were ordered to “sleep on their arms” as an attack was anticipated at any time. “A man of no great prepossessing appearance came rambling amongst our guns, and entered into conversation with me on the occurrences of the day. He was dressed in a shabby, old, drab greatcoat and a rusty round hat. I took him at the time for some amateur from Brussels (of whom we had heard there were several hovering about), and thinking many of his questions rather impertinent, was somewhat short in answering him, and he soon left us. How great was my astonishment on learning soon after that this was Sir Thomas Picton!

Captain Mercer the eve of Waterloo

The morning of the 18th dawned wet but cleared later General Picton with his Division was positioned on the road to Wavre behind a broken hedge from the farm of La Haye Sainte to Ter la Haye.

The French forces mounted a major attack against this position and the British artillery put down a very destructive fire but still the columns of French advanced until they got close to the hedge. Picton ordered Sir James Kempt's brigade forward and then General Pack's brigade to advance as well. Picton himself led them forward

According to Wellington's despatch “This was one of the most serious attacks made by the enemy on our position”

General Picton was waving his men on when a musket ball struck on the temple and he fell back dead.

After the victory General Picton's body was removed from the field and then it was found that his old coat was torn on one side. It then became apparent that he had been wounded at Quatre Bras on the 16th when a musket Ball had struck him and broken two of his ribs with other resulting injuries

The following brief report of General Picton's death was made by General Gascoyne to the House of Commons on the night of the 29th June:-

“In the battle of Quatre Bras previous to the great victory of the 18th, he had been dangerously wounded. From the moment he had left this country until he joined the army he had never entered any bed – he had scarcely given himself time to take any refreshment so eager was he in the performance of his duty. After the severe wound which he had received he would have been justified in not engaging in the action of the 18th. His body was not only blackened by it, but even swelled to a considerable degree: those who had seen it wondered that he should have been able to take part in the duties of the field. He had afterwards fallen gloriously at the head of his division, maintaining a position which, if it had not been kept, would have altered the fate of the day, and its issue might have been different from that which now occasioned such well- found rejoicing”

His body was brought home and buried on the 3rd of July at St Georges Church Hanover Square in the family vault.

There is a memorial to him in St. Paul's Cathedral, in Rudbaxton Church, Pembrokeshire and at Carmarthen

FINALLY

To H.R. Robinson, esq..

London August 28th 1835

Dear Sir

I have received your letter and have the greatest satisfaction in giving you the assurance that not only I was not on bad terms with the late Sir Thomas Picton, but that in the whole course of the period during which I was in relation with him I do not recollect even a difference of opinion, much less anything of the nature of a quarrel.

My first acquaintance with Sir Thomas Picton was when he joined the army in the Peninsula as a general officer on the staff. I had solicited his appointment, because I entertained a high opinion of his talents and qualities, from the report which I had received of both from the late General Miranda, who had known him in the west Indies. I never had any reason to regret, on the contrary, I had numerous reasons to rejoice that I solicited his appointment. It was made at a moment at which an unmerited prejudice existed against Sir Thomas Picton, the recollection of which was effaced by his services.

I afterwards solicited his appointment to the staff of the army of Flanders; than which I cannot give a stronger proof not only of my sense of his merits and former services, but likewise that I never was otherwise than on the best terms with him. The country was deprived of his valuable services on a glorious field of battle, in a short time after he joined the army; and there was no individual in that army or in England who lamented his loss more sincerely than I did

I have the honour to be, dear Sir,

Your most obedient humble servant

Wellington

Roblin acc to Brown History of Haverfordwest

The annals of crime in Pembrokeshire present a some what singular history. For ninety years past not an execution has taken place. The last was one that excited a good deal of sympathy. Roblin a man who was found guilty, first of manslaughter, and that verdict being refused by the presiding

Judge, afterwards of murder, though it was very generally felt that the first verdict would have satisfied justice, was hanged on Easier Monday 1821. In those days it was a short shrift, as he was only tried on Good Friday. So great was the horror occasioned by this execution, that the hangman was never known.

He charted much of the Australian coast and made the first important surveys of New Zealand since Cook.'

He was the second son of Henry Stokes of Scotchwell and Anne, daughter of George Phillips MD and grand-daughter of John Lort of Prikeston. His grandfather, John Rees, assumed the name Stokes, the family originally hailing from Roch Castle. John Lort Stokes entered the Royal Navy as a first class volunteer in HMS Prince Regent 120 at Sheerness on 20 September 1824. This was to be his first and only experience of a big ship. The following year he transferred into the brig HMS Beagle and first went to sea on 2 February 1826. He was to remain in the Beagle for the whole of her next three Commissions, rising in those 18 years through all the ranks to commander and to be her Captain. His first five years in the ship, 1825 to 1830, were spent surveying Patagonia and the Magellan Straits He joined H.M.S. Beagle as a 14 year old midshipman and was appointed to its command in 1848. In 1831 Charles Darwin sailed on the Beagle and became its naturalist and shared quarters with Stokes. His published works included the two-volume Discoveries in Australia and he was largely responsible for changing the name of Van Diemens Land to Tasmania.

Vaughan John 13 September 1911 of Cuckoo, Haverfordwest.Haverfordwest and Milford Haven Telegraph headlines “Terrible Double Murder. Crippled Husband’s Awful revenge. Blows up Sleeping Wife and Child and Himself Received Mortal Injuries.” John Vaughan of Cuckoo, Haverfordwest, the crippled Husband of a reputedly unfaithful wife, had written in a notebook “JaS Lewis done all this, JaS Lewis caused all this. Hang him, hang him.” On another Page, of the notebook was an order for gelignite. The newspaper, after giving an account of the explosion at Cuckoo where John Harries had poisoned two wives just over one hundred years earlier, commented “a fit of mad jealousy on the part of the Husband is responsible for this horrible deed”. John Vaughan, because of his disability, was unable to remove himself in time after lighting the fuse which ignited the gelignite and was killed by his own bomb. (His wheel chair got stuck in the mud outside the door – One story suggests that JaS Lewis was actually upstairs with the wife but escaped out of the window – and that it was common for him to go upstairs with the wife while the Husband was chairbound with his war injuries downstairs

Hayscastle

1870-72, John Marius Wilson's Imperial Gazetteer of England and Wales

Hayscastle, a parish in Haverfordwest district, Pembroke; on west Cleddau river, 5½ miles NW of Clarbeston road r. station, and 6½ N of Haverfordwest. It contains the villages of Brimstone and Ford; and its post-town is Wolfs-Castle, under Haverfordwest. Acres, 4,462. Real property, £1,866. Pop., 297. Houses, 62. The property is much subdivided. The living is a vicarage, annexed to the vicarage of Brawdy, in the diocese of St Davids. The Church is tolerable.

Hayscastle (Hays-Castle) Topographical Dictionary of Wales S Lewis 1839

Hayscastle (HayS-Castle), a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Dewisland, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 7½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Haverfordwest; containing 366 inhabitants. This parish, which is of considerable extent, is for the greater part inclosed and in a good state of cultivation. The living is a discharged vicarage, consolidated with that of Brawdy: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for £150, and the vicarial tithes for £30. The Church is dedicated to St. Mary ; and at the small village of Ford, in the parish, is a Chapel of ease. There are places of worship for Independents and Calvinistic Methodists; and two or three Sunday schools supported by the dissenters. Several tumuli were formerly discernible, but they have been nearly levelled

Ford - Topographical Dictionary of Wales S Lewis 1839

Ford, a Chapelry, in the parish of Hayscastle, union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Dewisland, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 7 miles (N.) from Haverfordwest: the population is included in the return for the parish. This Chapelry comprises a small tract lying at the north-eastern extremity of the parish, on the western bank of the Cleddy river, where it is joined by another small stream, and on the high road between Haverfordwest and Fishguard. The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £1200 royal bounty; net income, £70; patron, W. E. Tucker, esq. of Pembrokeshire

Ford. — A Chapel of Ease in the parish of Hayscastle. The plate is of pewter and consists of a Chalice, Paten cover, and Credence Paten. On the cup and its cover there are no marks but on both pieces are engraved in script " Ford Chapel ". The Credence paten is stamped " Bristol "

St Mary Church:

The nave and chancel are Norman but the latter has been rebuilt. The font is also Norman. The wooden framed windows are all 19c.

Hayscastle St Mary (1861-1863) Grant reason —Reseating /repairs with repairs to roof and walls, including new west window — Lindey W.H. of Haverfordwest Architect.

The Parish Church dedicated St Mary RCAM

This building is a much restored structure, consisting of a nave 37ft by 18ft, chancel 16ft by 11ft 6in, and a Bell-cote above the western gable. The chancel arch is rounded; it has a width of only 5ft. With every appearance of having been constructed at a later period when the east wall (which is 3ft thick) was cut through, and the chancel added. The windows are square with wooden frames. The font is of the cushion type; it has been refaced and spoiled. The bowl is now 22 ½ in square externally; the entire height is 29in. One of the modern roof beams is dated 1811 --Visited 29th September 1920

St Mary's Church, Hayscastle RCAHMW

St Mary's Church, Hayscastle, consists of a nave and chancel. The detail of the chancel arch suggest a twelfth century date, which can be assumed also for the adjacent Castle mound. The Church was modernised in 1927.J.Wiles, RCAHMW, 14 May 2002

This benefice was originally a curacy. There is no valuation of it in the Valor Eccl., but George Owen, in his list of churches compiled in 1594, states that the curacy belonged to the vicar of Brawdy. It is probable that the vicar of Brawdy also served Hayscastle, as there appear to be no very early presentations to this curacy. From 1711 down to the present date the same incumbents have held the two livings.

Ford: This is a perpetual curacy (without district assigned), in the parish of Hayscastle. It was a small Chapel originally founded about the year 1627 by Margaret Symmons of Martel, for the convenience of her tenants living there, who lay at a great distance from the parish Church of Hayscastle, Ford being at the very extremity of the parish. It was consecrated at her instance by Theophilus Field, then Bishop of St Davids, and endowed with a small stipend of two pounds per annum to the minister officiating there, by deed annexed to the Bishop's license and confirmation. John Symmons, son of the said Margaret, in his will enjoins his heir particularly to keep the said Chapel in repair, and pay the stipend he had engaged to do, as likewise does his son Thomas in his will enjoin his successor. The Chapel of late years has had such an augmentation to its endowment as to entitle it to Queen Anne's bounty.

Fenton's Pem., p. 331.

As appears by the following entry, the Chapel seems to have been rebuilt by William Knox of Llanstinar prior to the year 1786.

An Elizabethan Chalice with Paten cover, both pieces carrying the maker's mark only. The cup is a handsome vessel of the Amroth type with vertical Reed mouldings and two bands of plain strap-work round the bowl, but the upper band is of a very unusual pattern.

Within the lower one is inscribed "« POCVLVM # ECLESIE •• DE » HAYSCASTELL * 1575 »".

The stem has the customary central knob with fillets and is decorated with intermittent lines.

Height, 6in. ; diam. of bowl, 3 in. ; depth, 3 in. ; diam.of foot, 3 in. ; weight, 7 oz. 7 dwts. On the handle or foot of the Paten cover is engraved the initials " « F . L « " with a scroll above and below. Diam., 3 in.; height, 1 in.; weight, 1 oz. 15 dwts.

A Credence Paten quite plain, Hall-marked 1777 with illegible maker's Mark ; diam., 7 in. ; height, 3 in. .

RCAM – Ford Camp [Roman?]

About half a mile north west of the hamlet of Ford is a small earthwork 80ft by 60ft having slightly rounded Angles. This rectangular enclosure the 6in Ord Sheet marks as a “Roman Camp” the thicket of thorns about 100yds to the east is styled “Site of a Roman villa”.

The earthwork occupies rising ground above the southern bank of the western Cleddeau (here the boundary between the parishes of Hayscastle and St Dogwells) with a north westerly slope. The banks are composed of loose stones and soil, and, where fairly perfect have a summit width of 3ft. On the south side the bank rises to a height of from 4ft to 5ft and falls 7ft to an exterior ditch, now much filled up all round the enclosure. The remainder of the rampart averages 4ft in height, with a fall of some 5ft to 6ft to the ditch. Apparently there were two entrances, certainly one to the south east and possibly one to the west. The width may have been 10ft. Visited 5th May 1921.

Ford Camp –Fenton 1811 (Tour p 333)

“The remains of a small earthwork having an entrance into it from two opposite sides as if it had been intersected by a road.” ..its inner surface showed great inequalities, which led him to surmise that buildings of some kind had stood there formerly. It certainly could not be regarded as a strong post from its inconsiderable size and situation lying rather low, which inclined him to think it rather of Roman than British construction.

Ford – Roman Villa

100yds east of the camp is what is termed on the 6in Ord Sheet “ Site of Roman Villa”

Roman Villa Fenton (Tour 1811)

“ In the month of December 1806, a labourer employed in casting down an old hedge found a large number of bricks, proved afterwards from their peculiar form and ornament to be Roman: and stones which, on examination seemed to have been in contact with fire. This induced him to dig deeper, when he came to a pit of an oblong square, lined on each side with stone and mortar, about 8ft Long and near 6ft high; from each side of the side walls there were two flues springing up to the surface of the ground, elevated to about 45degrees. The mouth of the flues....were worked round with fluted Roman brick of about 1 1/8 in thick. There was a great quantity of ashes turned up appearing of culm and wood”

After his personal visit to the spot he adds “ I need not hesitate a moment to pronounce it a bath, part of a Roman Villa”.

[Fenton was familiar with Roman remains, and his evidence may be accepted. Without further excavation it is impossible to say whether the building was a hypocausted dwelling house or a military bath house. If the latter, the fort to which it belonged may have lain in the higher ground to the south and been obliterated by the plough]

In the course of a further examination of this site on the 14th March 1924 when the surface of the ground was clear of vegetation and the soil in the adjoining field had been turned over by the plough, several pieces of slate roofing tiles of distinctly Roman appearance were picked up. There can be no doubt that a Roman building of some description has occupied the site – RCAM 1924

Ford Camp RCAHMW

Site of Roman building, noted by Fenton (Tour through Pembroke. (1811), 333-4); building material & surface traces subsequently noted (St Joseph 1961 (JRS 51), 131); confirmed by geophysical survey & limited excavation 2003 (Merrony 2004 (J. Pemb. Hist. Soc. 13), 5-22): the villa evidently consisted of at least one stone-founded range, about 18.5m north-west to south-east by at least 7.5m, thought to have incorporated a bath suite: no indications of an enclosure about the villa were noted by the survey, although a rectangular enclosure complex to the east may have been associated with it. The site lies on a shelf of level ground on a north-facing hillside: its relationship with settlement enclosure roughly 100m to the west is uncertain. RCAHMW 2004.

Norman Motte

Barnard's Hill Tumulus

A tumulus lying about 600yds south of Barnard's Hill. It presents no appearance of having been disturbed, so far as the bramble and gorse grown surface permits examination. It has a height of 10ft and a base circumference of about 180ft. Both this mound and that of Rhyndaston Fawr are within 100yds of an early road or trackway, which passes through the parish east to west a continuation of the "causeway" of Camrose parish whilst Haycastle Tump stands close to it – Visited 20th September 1920. RCAM

Rhyndaston Fawr Tumulus

About 300yds north west of the farmhouse of Rhyndaston Fawr in a field known as "Tump" are the remains of a rifled tumulus. Its original height may have been from 10 to 12ft; its circumference at base 120ft."Some fine bronze urns were discovered when it was destroyed" (Pem Arch Survey c1900) visited 29th September 1920 RCAM

Haycastle Tump Roman road?????

This tumulus which when perfect must have been a fine example of its class, stands at the crossing of four roads, the one running due west being marked on the 6in ord sheet at "Roman road". Although the tumulus has been much disturbed it still has a height of 12ft with a base circumference of 150ft. An opening has been made on its eastern slope which has exposed, at a depth of about 5ft the massive stone of a probable cist, but does not seem to have disturbed it. A not very likely suggestion has been made that "this fine tump at the head of a so-called Roman road, was apparently originally constructed for military purposes and then converted into a burial ground (Pem Arch Survey). The adjoining field to the east is known as Parc y Twmpath - Visited 29th September 1920 RCAM

Haycastle Tump RCAHMW

Haycastle Tump is a much mutilated barrow, measuring c.32m across and 2.0m high. Cremations within urns within cists have been attributed to this site, but not securely; a large, possibly upright stone, observed within the barrow, may have been part of an internal structure. RCAHMW J.Wiles 08.05.2002

West Fort Ring

This well preserved circular enclosure is placed 200yds north of Nant y Coy brook, at this point the boundary between the parishes of Hayscastle and Trefgarn. The enclosure occupies a level plateau from which on the south the ground falls sharply to the brook. The surrounding bank measures 180yds This bank increases in height towards the north west to about 4ft, it then falls about 7ft to a ditch 5ft wide having a bank in front as high as the inner bank, with an exterior fall of 3ft to the natural level. To the north east the bank is inconsiderable. The entrance, about 10ft in width is to the east. The bank on either side of the entrance is in-curved for a length of ten ft –Visited 5th May 1921. RCAM

Castell Haidd

Closely adjoining the parish Church is a somewhat ruined mound, with its surrounding ditch now choked up. The mound, which has a height of some 20ft. is heavily clothed with vegetation. There are no present appearances of a Bailey, though it may be occupied by the buldings of a neighbouring farm –visited 29th September 1920 RCAM

Castell Haidd RCAHMW

A motte, tree-covered in 1975, measuring 4.0m high and 36m in diameter, with traces of a ditch to the north and south. There is no trace of a Bailey and the mound has been damaged, possibly by gravel-digging. St Mary's Church lies immediately to the south-east. RCAHMW J.Wiles 14.05.02

St Lawrence Camp RCAHMW

A promontory fort where a roughly 68m swathe of two north-west facing banks with a medial ditch cut off a tongue of land, about 90m deep, tapering to the east above the confluence of two streams; a third bank reinforces the entrance at the southern end of the bank-system: there are unconfirmed reports of Roman building material being found here. RCAHMW J.Wiles 07.05.02

Henry's-moat, a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Kemmes, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 10½ miles (N. E. by N.) from Haverfordwest; contains 338 inhabitants. This place derives its name from an ancient tumulus in the form of a truncated cone, surrounded by a moat, and in all probability formerly surmounted by a military work, called by the Welsh Castell Hêndrêv, or "the Castle of the old town." The parish comprises 3166 acres. It is for the greater part enclosed, and in a good state of cultivation; the portions of unenclosed land, consisting chiefly of heath and turbaries, afford pasturage for sheep, and supply the principal fuel of the inhabitants. The soil is various, being rich and fertile in the lower and cultivated grounds, but in other parts poor and unproductive. The scenery, though not distinguished by any striking peculiarity of feature, is generally pleasing; the views over the adjacent country are interesting, and in some instances extensive. The living is a discharged rectory, rated in the King's Books at £5. 6. 8., and endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty; patron, W. H. Scourfield, esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £145; and there is a glebe of about 5¼ acres, valued at £5 per annum. The Church, dedicated to St. Bernard, presents no architectural details of importance. There are places of worship for Baptists and Independents, with a Sunday school held in each of them; also a Sunday school held by the Calvinistic Methodists, in a dwelling-house. St. Mary's Well, about three miles from the Church, and within three-quarters of a mile of St. Mary's Church, but in this parish, is stated to afford relief to such as are afflicted with rheumatism.

The Parish Church dedicated to St Brynach RCAM

The Church consists of a small nave, chancel, south transept, north porch, and a western Bell cote. A few ancient features were retained in the restoration of 1884. On either side of the low pointed chancel arch are two projecting corbels which supported the rood beam. In the chancel is a plain piscina with circular bowl and drain; also a portion of a slab upon which is carved a plain incised cross within a circle. The font is of the cushion type; the basin 21in square externally and 16in internally by 13 in deep, slopes of a circular shaft on a square base, the total height being 32 in. In the churchyard are the base of a cross, and a boulder which is locally said to have been the fragment of a cromlech. visited 24th September 1914.

The nave and chancel are probably 13c and the south transept is probably 14c but the restoration of 1884 has left no datable features. In the Church is a stone from the nearby Chapel which once stood alongside the nearby holy well.

Henry's Mote (S. Brynach). —An Elizabethan Chalice and Paten cover, measuring 7 in. in height; with the cover, 8 in. The Hall marks indicate the year 1574, the maker's Mark being A H in plain oblong. This maker's Mark is also found at Morvil, these vessels bearing the same characteristics as those belonging to that parish. In repairing the rim, the bowl of the Henry's Mote chalice has been made about an inch deeper. It is ornamented with two belts, the upper intersecting four times and enclosing the conventional foliation; the lower containing the following inscription " - POCVLVM DE EGLESIE HARY SMOT ". As at Morvil, the space between each word is filled in with graceful sprays of foliation, and the knop which divides the stem is ornamented with intermittent lines. Beneath the bowl and also on the foot is a band of vertical line moulding. Diam. of bowl, 3 in.; present depth, 3 in.; weight, 7 oz. 5 dwts. The Paten cover is 3 in. in diameter and weighs 2 oz. 5 dwts. The date " 1574 " is engraved on the foot handle within a decorated circle of strap-work. Two more of these circles appear near the rim.—

A Paten 7 in. in diam., having the Birmingham Hall Mark of 1888 with maker's Mark WS; weight, 70z. 10dwts. The centre is decorated with a cross pattern within a circle, and round the rim is inscribed " Presented to Henry's Mote Church, Pembrokeshire, by Mrs. Charles Pryse August 1889".

Besides a small electro-plated Paten, there is a pewter Plate, 10 in. in diameter, rudely inscribed " H. M." and by the same maker as that of the Llanycefn plate, viz. "William Watkins".

This parish has no residential Clergyman. It is an agricultural parish with three farmers paying over £100 per year in rent but no landed proprietor resident who make subscriptions for the maintenance of a school. Labourers are paid 8d a day with food and 1s without food. The moral character is regarded as good. Most of the population can Read but not write and there are about 20 children who have had no schooling. Information from Stephen Edwards Blaen y wern Henrys moat.

Dyffeyn Stones

This “Circle” so styled on the Ord sheet, stands on the farm of Dyffryn, on the right bank of the Syfnwy stream within a mile of Rosebush railway station. It is known locally as “Garn Ochr”. So far as the overgrowth permits of examination the monument appears to be the circumference of a ruined tumulus. It now displays a circle of thirteen low stones, the diameter of which is 65ft. With three exceptions the stones are of the size usually forming the base of a tumuli. Within the circle is a heap of smaller stones and stone, having the present height of about 2ft. Twelve yards to the north east are three meime hiron, one erect(4ft) and two fallen which appear to be supporters of the buried cromlech; the latter were upstanding within living memory. At a distance of some 700yds, in a field called Parc Maen hir, is another standing stone – the Budloy stone, and at a distance of some 30 yards to the south east is another prostrate monolith. The Budloy stone is 7ft above ground, and is said to be “worked” with a tool on the western side, which is towards the Dyffryn circle. Arch

Camb* 1911

The Markings however are somewhat indefinite. The name Parc y Pist “field of the posts” was used to designate the site by one aged inhabitant. This site should receive careful exploration – visited 25th September 1914.

Holmus Cromlech

About 300 yds to the south east of Holmus farm house are three prostrate and partially buried stones. These were erect within living memory, and are reported to have been the supporting stones of a cromlech, the capstone of which was “fired” to furnish building material. To the east of the stones and 200 yds distant, is a stone in the hedge on the side of a lane, which may have been connected with the cromlech. The two stones, probably taken from the cromlech have been placed as rubbing posts for cattle in fields on either side of the same lane – visited 25th September 1923.

Camp

An oval enclosure 180ft by 150ft surrounded by an earthen bank, now 2 to 3ft high, and by an outer ditch, which in places is 4ft deep, and in others has almost disappeared. On the west side the earthwork has been obliterated by the high road – visited 19th September 1914.

Tuhton Castle

A small circular enclosure about 100ft in diameter, 300 yds north east of Tuhton village. It has almost disappeared under cultivation, the bank being almost level with the surrounding surface. It is seen at its best on the south west where the bank may be about one ft high. The ditch is practically filled up. The entrance was probably the point where the present high road impinges on the enclosure. A Long narrow field called Llain y Castell divided by many lateral fences. Stretches northwards from the earthwork – visited 15th September 1914.

Henry's moat

Immediately north of the parish Church is a fine mound, which is marked on the Ord. Sheet as "Tumulus" It rises to a height of some 15ft and has a summit diameter of 35ft; it has a slight depression in the centre. The ditch is best seen towards the west; on the east side it has almost disappeared (if it ever existed) in the steep slope of the Hill. The Bailey may have originally taken in the "Camp" in which case the Castle enclosure was of unusual extent; the two earthworks are now quite separate – visited 29th September 1914.

St Brynach's Chapel and Well

About $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile north east of the parish Church are the ruins of a small well Chapel dedicated to St Brynach. The Chapel has long since fallen into ruin and is now hardly traceable, Fenton (Tour p355) refers to the well "Cross over a small brook to St Brynach's Well a redundant spring close to the ruins of an old Chapel, having an upright rude stone pitched on end near it, rudely marked with a cross" [It is not improbable that the rude stone bearing a cross now preserved in the Parish Church is the stone referred to by Fenton.] The spring still flows strongly, protected by a modern masonry Hood. Adjoining are traces of the well chamber; a hedge now separates the well from the site of the Chapel. The site itself is a wilderness of undergrowth in which vestiges of foundations can still be dimly traced. The little Chapel may have had a length of about 30ft – visited 25th September 1914

St Mary's Well (marked of the Ord sheet as a "Roman road")

This well stands at the side of an early roadway (marked of the Ord sheet as a "Roman road") in the south corner of the parish, where it adjoins that of Maenclochog. The strong spring is protected by a few mountain boulders. The well still goes by the name St Mary's Well, and the adjoining cottage to the south west is known as "Ffynnon Fair – visited 29th September 1914.

1811 Fenton, Tours

The village of Herbranston with its old Church and truncated tower, a little to the right of my road were temptations for digressing too strong for me to visit; I therefore alighted to be disappointed, for the Church within is rude and simple to a degree, and contains nothing capable of arresting the antiquary's attention but a plain stone in the chancel, bearing an embossed head of a priest almost smooth, which "holy feet had worn" without date or inscription.

In a small creek at the bottom of a little dingle, whose edges this straggling village occupies, it is said the Flemings first landed, and it is remarkable that there are more foreign hereditary customs kept up here than in any other part of Roos. There can hardly be a doubt of Herbrandt, who, in the scramble partition of the country, seized this part and gave it its name, being a Fleming; for I find in a MS of George Owen, who had investigated those matters with more minuteness than any man Herbranston enumerated among the original Flemish settlers in the country, as extracted from deeds and other ancient documents he had been at pains to collect.

Herbrandston, a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Rhôs, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 3 miles (W. N. W.) from Milford; contains 249 inhabitants. This parish derives its name from one of the Norman or Flemish settlers in Pembrokeshire, named Herbrand, who, soon after the Conquest, fixed his residence here. It is situated on the eastern side of a bay in Milford Haven, and is of small extent; the land is very fertile, and in a high state of cultivation. A Fair is held annually in the village on the 12th of August, chiefly for hiring farm-servants. The living is a rectory, rated in the King's Books at £7. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor: the tithes have been commuted for £222, with a house, and a glebe of about one acre. The Church, dedicated to St. Mary , is a plain structure, with a low massive tower.

Church St Mary's

The nave and the chancel with tomb recesses on either side are 13c although the windows are Victorian. One recess contains a damaged 14c military effigy. The porches are probably 14c and there is a west 13c tower inclined to the north.

The Parish Church Dedicated to St Mary

This Church, which was held by the priory of St Thomas at Haverfordwest consists of a nave 36ft by 17ft, chancel 23ft by 15 ft with recesses on the north and south sides, north and south porches 9 ½ ft by 7 ½ ft and 7 ½ ft by 5 1/2ft respectively, and western tower 19ft by 17ft. The roof and windows are modern with the exceptions noted. In the south wall of the chancel are a blocked priests door, a single light trefoil-headed window, and a plain piscina. The choir recesses are lit by single pointed trifoliated lights; in the south recess is an effigy noted below. The chancel arch is pointed, and without capitals. Above the south door, immediately beneath the hammer beams is a corbel with a mitred head and in a similar position above the north door is a crowned female head. The north porch has been converted into a vestry, and a single light installed in the blocked entrance. The roof is a plain vault. The south door has a pointed arch. Between the north door and the chancel is a low recess which, previous to the restoration of 1904, contained the effigy now placed in the chancel. Between the north porch and the tower a shallow modern bay has been thrown out. The nave windows were renewed at the restoration. The tower is now of two storeys: between the years 1740 and 1770, the third stage with battlements and corbel table, were removed. A sketch plan in the register of 1740 shows the tower intact while the Bell frame bears the date 1770. A turret of 35 stairs in the south west angle ends abruptly, and the roof is now tiled. The ground storey, which has a pointed vault, has no exterior door; it is lit by a modern two light window to the west. A pointed arch connects it with the nave. It is lighted by plain slits. On the east gable of the nave is an empty sanctus bellcote; the sketch of 1740 shows the Bell in position. The font basin is a modern copy of that in Rudbaxton Church; it is mounted on a circular shaft 48 in circumference and 17in high with a square base. The effigy now in the south choir recess is much worn. Fenton refers to it as “a plain stone in the chancel bearing an embossed head of a priest, without date or inscription (Tours p178)” It shows a face in relief on a cushion, and beneath it apparently a sword. The effigy which may be assigned to the 14th century, is probably that of a knight.

Education

The State of Education in Wales 1847 For this parish there is no entry it would appear to be one of the five parishes which are utterly without a day school of any sort.

Board School

A board school was opened in 1878 for children of age range 5 years to 11 years

“1st August 2010 acc/Western Telegraph Newspaper

The gates have closed once and for all on the Herbrandston base of Coastlands CP School. Prior to being Coastlands CP School the building was used for Herbrandston CP School, and back in the 1970s and 1980s, it had a wonderful reputation.

The building has been here for more than 100 years and is a fundamental part of our village framework.”

The school still had its 1940 air raid shelter, a single storey building with a reinforced concrete roof. The doorway in the west wall was protected by a brick blast wall. Windowless, the building had ventilation bricks under the eaves and was designed to protect up to fifty people.

Wrecks

"Felicita" in Sandy Haven on the 20 February 1833 acc to the Cambrian

"The Neapolitan brig Felicity, G G D'Amon, master from Glasgow, laden with coals and bale goods, bound for Palermo and Leghorn, in returning to Milford Haven in the night of Tuesday, ran on shore in Sandy Haven Bay, opposite the Stack Rock, within the harbour; when she was discovered at daylight a complete wreck, and was finally knocked all to boards. The crew, 18 in number, were sticking by the wreck, 6 of whom were drowned in attempting to swim on shore or washed off into the sea. Great praise is justly due to Mr William Field (brother of the late Mr Richard Field of Milford shipbuilder), who dashed under the breakers, and swam to the brig, and succeeded in bringing 9 of the crew on shore alive. - The Boatswain, a stout man of 6 feet, died in his arms whilst being conveyed on shore, also a boy about 12 years of age, after being carried safe to land. The Master, a good swimmer, in attempting to reach the shore was seen to buffet the waves and go down. - Four of the bodies have been brought on shore, viz. the master, mate, boatswain, and a boy; two not yet found. A part of the bale goods has been saved in a damaged state. It must be observed, that not one of the many spectators would venture to the wreck but Mr Field, who had two or three narrow escapes for his life in his perilous exertions."

The Rath

The discovery of this fine cliff Castle is primarily due to the Tithe Survey Schedule where the name of the field in which it is placed, Rath Park, is preserved. The position is the usual – a small headland jutting out into the sea is defended by a strong curved rampart and ditch. The chord of the arc measures 150ft. From the level of the enclosure the bank rises 10ft and drops 20ft to the 10ft wide ditch, the later has a counter-scarp of 10ft largely excavated out of the rock. The entrance is at the north west end of the bank; it has evidently been much narrowed by falls of the cliffs; its present width averages 6ft. An interesting feature of this camp is the clear trace of a path to the sea level. As viewed from the lighthouse of Great Castle Head, the track shows undoubted signs of scarping and though broken in places, its course is practically continuous; it is not visible from certain parts of the camp – visited 28th July 1920

Hill Park Stone

A boulder standing on a field styled Hill Park about 500 yds due south of Herbranston parish Church, The stone is about 56ins. Above the soil 20ins. Wide and faces south west. At its base and largely covered with soil, is a prostrate stone of apparently similar dimensions, suggesting that both are parts of a cromlech that has been dismantled. - visited 28th July 1920.

South Hook

This is now the site of a LNG terminal and a Gas fired Power station

It would appear that this site been used for industrial purposes for centuries.

As part of the investigations before the redevelopment of the site for the LNG terminal an Archaeological investigation was undertaken in 2004-5

Evidence was revealed of Bronze age workings, of iron making and of cereal drying during the 8th to 10th century AD.

Geo Arch Report 2006/14 Evaluation of archaeometallurgical residues from South Hook LNG Terminal by Dr Tim Young September 25th 2006

“The iron making assemblage is of great significance because of the lack of evidence for iron smelting of 8 – 10th century in Wales, and the paucity of evidence in SW Britain in general”

Sarah Woodbury in her blog posted April 10th 2012 states

“The discovery of corn-dryers with early medieval radiocarbon dates has contributed to the growing number of early medieval examples excavated in Wales which can throw valuable light on the crops grown, their ratio to each other and how they were processed. South Hook is a particularly important site since several corn dryers were excavated together with rotary quern stones and a significant assembly of charred grain samples. Carbonised grain from the base of one dryer provided a radiocarbon date of AD720-960” from at least 1740 to the end of the 18th century there was a small lead mine working at South Hook Point. The site has been overtaken by the Fort and the LNP refinery site

George Owen

In his Pamphlet on the Fortifications of the Milford Haven written in 1595 mentions South Hook Point and referring to landing places says “Badd, South- Hooke pointe.”

Cliff Castle

On a field belonging to South Hook farm called Castle field, the old 1in Ordnance map marks a camp which has been practically obliterated by recent military operations. It appears to have been one of the many promontory castles, with bank some 150 feet in length, slight remains of which are possible to trace. More cannot be said with certainty. – visited 28th July 1920

Chapel Field

On this field which belongs to South Hook Farm, one mile south east of the parish Church, and approached by a narrow lane that in places retains some cobble stones, are traces of grass covered foundations which point to some small structure having stood here. visited 28th July 1920

South Hook Fort Herbrandston Grade 2 listed buildings

1858 South Hook Fortifications

The Fort sometimes referred to as a battery, was the result of the proposals of the 1858 Committee. It was some 80 to 100 feet above high water and was secured at the rear by a defensible barracks capable of mounting guns on its roof and connected to the batteries by a parapet and ditch on each side. The western battery mounted fifteen and the Eastern one five guns linked by a covered way. The barracks is a two storey building with a bomb proof roof; the outer wall some four feet thick forms a scarp 35 feet in height. Its outline is an arc culminating in two demi-bastions at the rear with two small caponiers covering the scarp wall. Just outside the rear of the barracks is an underground tunnel leading to the main magazine. The Fort was the cornerstone of the Haven's defences until batteries were built at East and west blockhouse; it was manned by regulars and militia and in 1886 was used during the Milford Haven Experiment, an exercise to assess the effectiveness of the minefield, searchlights and guns to defend a commercial port. The western fifteen gun battery was demolished in 1889 and replaced by batteries for two 10 inch breech loader however only one gun was mounted. These batteries were replaced between 1900 and 1904 by ones for three 6-inch and a 9.2 inch breech loaders. At the western end of the covered way a battery was built for three 6pdr quick fire between 1897 and 1898 but these guns were never mounted, instead the battery was adapted to take two 12pdr quick fire. The Fort was used in 1890 to evaluate a 10 inch breech loader gun on a Royal Carriage Department mounting. The Owen Report declared the 9.2 inch gun superfluous so in 1907 it was dismounted and sent to west blockhouse to replace a gun there that had developed choke.

During the First World War a 6-inch gun was removed from the Fort and a 12pdr quick fire was withdrawn; sometime between 1919 and 1928 the two remaining 6-inch guns were dismounted and sent to west blockhouse. Finally in July 1935 the two 12pdr quick fire guns were dismounted and sent to East blockhouse to form a practice battery.

In 1914 there was an examination battery at the Fort during the war.

The Fort was sold in 1936 however it was requisitioned at the beginning of the Second World War and became HMS Skirmisher operated by WRENS controlling all Naval movements in the Haven

In the late 1950's the Esso Petroleum Company purchased the Fort and built an oil refinery which was demolished in the 1980's.

In October 2005 the fort was recorded as empty, but secure. It has once again been purchased and turned into an LNG terminal. The fort is within the securely fenced area belonging to the refinery. The battery remains outside the boundary and is just off the coastal path.

The defensible barracks at South Hook Fort Herbrandston 3 April 2004. In a prominent position some 200m N of the cliffs at South Hook Point.

Refineries (South Hook)

Esso Refinery construction began in 1957, and it was opened in 1960 till 1970's . it was dis-invested in the 1980's

Before This refinery was built the village population stood at 200 but it rose to 1534.

The site has once again been purchased and turned into an LNG terminal and Gas fired Power station

Hodgeston

Parish Church.RCAM

The Church consists of chancel (30 1/2 feet by 16 1/2 feet), nave (31 feet by 14 feet tower (13 feet square), and north porch. Its earliest parts are the nave and tower

The chancel was rebuilt in the first half of the 14th century, possibly under the direct influence of Bishop Henry Gower 1328-1347), as has been suggested by Dr. E. A. Freeman. It has a triple sedilia and double piscina of decorated work; these are flanked on either side by stone benches. The windows are modern restorations. In the south-west angle are the rood stairs, whilst two corbels which supported the rood beam are in situ on the west side of the plain pointed chancel arch.

The nave is plainly vaulted; at the east end of the vault are the remains of a vanished bell-cote. In the north wall is a blocked pointed doorway; to the right of the south doorway is a stoup recess.. The tower of four storeys, the two lowest being vaulted; the ground chamber is entered only from the Church. Instead of a battlement a plain corbelled parapet. On the north side of the tower is the turret stair, rising clear of the parapet. The ground storey is lighted by a modern window which has been inserted above the still remaining original loop. The second and third stories are lighted by slits; the Bell-chamber has to the east a double window with circular heads, and to the west a double light with square Hood.

The font bowl (27 inches square externally, and 20 inches internally, with a depth of 61 inches) is of cushion type; the east and west faces each bear a cross of quasi-early form. The bowl stands upon a circular shaft and square chamfered base; marks of a cover are visible.

In 1831 the entire building was in " a state of extreme dilapidation, the windows being blocked and partially destroyed, and the roof in a condition of complete decay. "

The bell, still in use, bears the legend + SANCTA + Maria + ORA + PRO + .NOBIS + . It dates from the mid-15th century visited 18th May 1922

According to Glynne 1851

This Church has a nave and a large chancel with western tower, but no porch. There is a curious contrast between the fine Middle pointed chancel and the rude Pembrokeshire nave and tower. The chancel is almost of equal length with the nave, and has unluckily been much mutilated; but it presents a very good specimen of Middle pointed; unusual in this part of the country. The windows (two on each side) are unhappily now closed, but are each of two lights. The east window is a wretched modern one. There is a string, internally, beneath the windows, and along the south side of the chancel runs a stone bench. There is also a curious cornice of flowers, in stone , just beneath the chancel roof; which is now a very poor one of wood, but probably a stone one was intended. The grand feature of the chancel are the beautiful sedilia. Three in number, with ogee canopies, crocketed and finialed with intermediate pinnacles and a cornice of Ball-flower. The canopies have trefoil feathering, and the shafts between them are octagonal. These are set rather farther westward than usual, and one of the windows is placed between them and the piscine. The piscine has a double ogee-head much like the sedilia, and very rich finials. Against the east wall is a bracket of stone. The chancel arch is a rude pointed one. westward of it is part of a stone fence.

According to the 1851 census of religious buildings the area of the Parish was equal to 709 acres and the population was 78 36 males and 41 females

The space in the Church was recorded as 8 free places and 40 allocated and Henry Hughes the minister records the attendance at the afternoon service as being 80 which is far more than the capacity of the Church and more than the total population of the parish.

The parish registers which are available in the Pembrokeshire county records Office date back to 1766 although there is a Bishop's transcript available in the National Library of Wales for 1686-87.

There was much rebuilding in 1851. and the Church was restored 1880's

Medieval free Chapel including an important C14 chancel with decorated period sedilia and piscina.

Church Plate of Pembrokeshire JT Evans 1905 Hodgeston

Here is the oldest Elizabethan Chalice and Paten cover in Pembrokeshire Both pieces bear the date letter for 1568 with maker's Mark 1 P in a shaped shield. This maker's Mark is found at Westerham, Kent, 1566 ; in Leicestershire at Catthorpe 1568 ; Twyford 1569 ; at Corpus Christi Coll., Cambridge, 1570; Llanllawei 1573; and is very common in Somersetshire. Around the bowl of the Hodgeston Chalice are two bands of plain strap-work enclosing the usual foliation and intersecting four times, one leaf only appearing above and below each point of intersection. Between these bands i.e. round the centre of the bowl is inscribed "+ POCVLVM » ECLESIE « DE ». HAOSTON ". That are no vertical reed mouldings. The stem is divided by a knop, a small fillet above and below and decorated with intermittent lines. To the Paten cover has been attached a modern paten, Hall-marked 1880 with maker's Mark Hew in a tri-lobed shield. This is the most hopeless, stupid piece of ' restoration ' in the County.

Around the handle or foot on which is inscribed the date "1569" is a band of plain strap-work enclosing the usual foliage.

— A pewter Plate, 1 1 in. in diameter, and roughly scratched " Hotson 1786 ". It carries the marks : " London " ; a rose crowned, twice ; B & C ; hands clasped ; stag couchant ; lion rampant. It was probably made in London for a Bristol or other country maker as there is no trace of him in the London Lists.

— A pewter Chalice and Paten have disappeared.

In 1594 one moiety of the patronage was owned by the Earl of Essex, who bought it from Wogan, and the other moiety belonged to John ap Res and the de Longueville family, the right of presentation being appendant to the manor of Hodgeston.— Owen Pem.

moat RCAM

This is a square enclosure (60ft by 60ft) a few yards west of the parish Church. The moat which surrounds it still contains water on three sides, the forth is much overgrown. A small building stood within the moat until about the year 1870 when it was removed. visited 18th May 1922

NB a small probably manor of Hodgeston certainly existed in the medieval period, but its history is practically a blank. There is no appearance of a baronial mound in the parish, but this feature may be represented by the moated mansion noticed above

About 20 yds south west of Carew Beacon and on the south side of the Ridgeway is the site of a vanished tumulus , respecting which the following remarks appeared in Arch Camb 1851 11 One tumulus has been opened about thirty years ago (1826) and a skeleton found; stones also are said to have been removed.

Also on 13 October, in the year abovesaid, the Bishop collated, to Master John Colle clerk, at Charleton, the free Chapel of Hoggeston of his collation and diocese, vacant by the death of Master Thomas Picton, last rector or warden of the same; and instituted him etc. And he took the oath etc. And it was written to Sir Richard Wythlokes, dean of Pembroke, or Sir Bernard Tyler, vicar of Lantefey, to induct him, under the same date saving always the archdeacon's right in all things. And he had letters etc.

Also on 14 July in the year abovesaid, at Charlton, the Bishop collated to Master John Cole the free Chapel of OGESTON, vacant by the death of Sir Thomas Pycton, last rector or warden of the same, and pertaining to the Bishop's collation for this turn by lapse; and instituted him etc. And it was written to Master Philip ap Res to induct him, saving the archidiaconal right. And he had the letters necessary for him in this behalf.

1407 February

Guy, etc., to John, prior of the priory of St. Thomas the Martyr, Haverford, greeting, etc.

Order, - Although all and singular who hinder or disturb, cause others to hinder or disturb, or ratify these things done in their name, any persons whatsoever holding ecclesiastical benefices and any one of them from being able to dispose freely in respect of such their benefices of the tithes, profits, rents, fruits and oblations of the same, or who lightly withdraw, carry away or take away, cause or procure to be withdrawn, carried away or taken away, tithes, fruits, rents, profits and oblations, beyond and contrary to the will of rectors and vicars and other ecclesiastics, or ratify such withdrawal, carrying away and taking away, done in their name, are in the constitutions of the holy father, in the condemnation of the sentenced the greater excommunication, nevertheless some sons of iniquity, satellites of Satans unmindful of their own salvation, have hindered and disturbed and still disturb Master John Cole, rector or warden of the free Chapel of Ogiston, from being able to dispose freely in respect of his said Chapel of the tithes, profits, fruits, rents and oblations of the same free Chapel, as of right he should, and have ratified and still ratify such impediment and disturbance done in their name; and such his tithes, fruits, rents, profits and oblations, beyond and against his will, they have withdrawn, carried and taken away, caused or procured to be withdrawn, carried and taken away, and have ratified the withdrawal, carrying and taking away, done in their name, and still illegally detain such tithes etc. withdrawn, carried away and taken away, incurring the condemnation of the said sentence of the greater excommunication under which they still remain to the grave peril of the souls of themselves and of others Willing to have dealings with the same, and the great prejudice of the said Master John and his Chapel aforesaid. Wherefore we commit unto [and] firmly enjoining in virtue of obedience and under pain of the greater excommunication command you that you solemnly pronounce in your churches during the solemnisation of mass when the number of people present is largest, with ringing of bells, with the cross Uplifted, with candles lighted and thrown to the ground for their Condemnation, and the other solemnity usual in such denunciation, you denounce all and singular such malefactors as having been so excommunicated generally, and as being excommunicated, not ceasing from such denunciation until you have other mandate from us. Dated on the day and in the year and place abovesaid.

And like mandates went out to the rector and the vicar of Carrew; the rector and the vicar of Manerbeere; and the rector of St. Giles; and to all curates of the same deaneries.

1407 November 24

On the 24th day of the same month etc. he admitted Sir John Malenfant, priest, to the free Chapel of Hodgeston of the diocese of St Davids, vacant by the free resignation of Master John Smyth last rector of the same; on the presentation of Henry Malenfant and Thomas Sturmyrn, lords of Hodgeston, true patrons of the said free Chapel for this turn, and instituted him as rector etc.

1486 Philip Percival held the living of Talbenny and the free Chapel of Hodgeston

1487 10 May

On 10 May at the manor of Lantfey, one Sir William Mendes then vicar of Lantfey aforesaid was admitted to the free Chapel of Hogeston vacant by the death in the course of nature of Sir Philip Persivall last warden of the same; on the presentation of William Perrot of Scotsborough, then sole and true patron of the same as was fully proved by an inquisition made in that behalf. And he had letters of induction in the usual form.

Henry King of England etc., to Edward etc., Bishop of St David's greeting. Whereas you and the rest of the prelates and Clergy of the province of Canterbury assembled in the last convocation or holy synod of such prelates and Clergy in the Church of the divine Paul, London, begun and celebrated on 6 February in the year 1511-12 according to the course and computation of the English Church and continued day by day unto and on 17 December then next following granted unto us for the defence and protection of the Anglican Church and this our famous realm of England as well as to allay and extirpate heresies and schisms in the Church universal which in these days flourish more than usually, under the manners, forms, conditions, and exceptions written below, not otherwise not in any other manner, four tenths of all ecclesiastical benefices and possessions whatsoever, also of all benefices and possessions of alien priories whatsoever, being in the hands of whatsoever ecclesiastics or secular men of the said province, the specific exceptions within written only excepted, to be Levied, collected and paid in the manner, form and terms following, namely one and the first tenth on the feast of St Martin in the Winter next to come which will be in the year 1513, the second truly on the feast of St Peter ad Vincula then next to come which will be in the year 1514, and the third on the feast of the Holy apostles Phillip and James which will be in the year 1515, the fourth and last tenth truly on the feast of the said Apostles which will be in the year 1516 saving from the grant, levy, and payment of the said tenth etc., as it more fully appears in the said writ of the King hanging on the file of the year 1513.

Collectors of the first kings tenth to be paid on the feast of St Martin Bishop and confessor above

The prior of Pembroke collector in the archdeaconry of St David's

The goods, Church possessions and benefices, in the diocese of St David's which have been deminished, impoverished, and other destroyed by wars, fires, ruins, inundation's of rivers and other misfortunes and chances deservedly to be excused from payment of the same four tenths according to the force etc., of the grant of the same by the authority of the said convocation follow and are these as appears on the other part of the folio here following etc.

In the archdeaconry of St David's are excepted the churches here underwritten :-

In the deanery of Pembroke the underwritten churches are excepted

Hodgeston (so it would appear that at this date the Church was not in very good condition like most of the other churches in the area.)

Rev George Holcombe to Charles Moss Bishop of St Davids

Mr Seall the vicar of St Mary's etc Pembroke is now with me and has desired me to present his duty to your lordship and to lay before you the following' particulars. That, as he lives in Shropshire and has expectations, particularly from Lord Clive, whose Principal seat is in the parish where he lives he humbly and earnestly entreat that your lordship will be pleased to dispense for some time at least with his personal residence at Pembroke, and that he will take care that his parishes shall be served by an able curate who will perform the duty as fully and as conscientiously as he himself could do were he personally resident. That the principal inhabitants of his parishes have recommended to him Mr. Williams, the vicar of Hodgeston in the deanery of Pembroke, whom I know personally and who performs parochial duties both as a Reader and preacher extremely well and who lives in the town of Pembroke and is a man besides of sobriety and of a good character. The present curate's name is Hughes, vicar of Landphey. The parishes do not much approve of him to continue the curate as his manner of reading and preaching is not so edifying, and indeed to my own knowledge I am certain that as an officiating minister he is greatly inferior to Mr. Williams. Mr. Seall seems to be a modest, well-meaning man and has desired me to address your lordship upon this affair previously to his writing to you which he soon himself intends to do. Your lordship's tenant of Castle Morrice has at length paid me the rent you expect of him.

1839 Topographical Dictionary of Wales - Hodgeston

Hodgeston, a parish, in the hundred of Castlemartin, union and county of Pembroke, South Wales, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Pembroke, on the road to Tenby; containing 75 inhabitants. This parish is by some writers supposed to have been the site of an ancient religious establishment, of the existence of which, however, there are not the slightest traces, nor has it even a traditionary history. The supposition rests chiefly, if not entirely, upon the evidence of an ancient deed still extant, in which John Stackpool styles himself "capellanus," and dates from "Ogggeston;" but there is every probability that the writer was chaplain of the episcopal palace at Lamphey, about half a mile distant, and held the rectory of this parish at the same time. Hodgeston is situated in the southern part of the county, and is bounded by the parishes of Manorbeer, Lamphey, and Carew and the sea, contiguous to what is called Freshwater bay. It contains by admeasurement 709 acres, mostly arable and pasture, with a small quantity of waste, and little or no woodland: the tillage is of a Fair average quality, after the practice of the country, but not according to the improved system. The surface is in general level, but partly undulated, and towards the north rises to a considerable elevation, as it likewise does on the south towards the sea. There runs a vein of limestone from east to west, which is wrought and occasionally burnt for the use of the farms. The living is a rectory, rated in the King's Books at £7. 13. 4.; patrons, Sir John Owen, Bart., and Pryse Pryse, esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rentcharge of £73; and there is a glebe of twenty acres, valued at £26 per annum. The Church is a neat edifice, with a lofty square embattled tower, and was probably erected about the time of Henry I., as most of the churches appear to have such towers where the Flemings were located by that Monarch: there is a handsome chancel, considerably larger than would seem to have been required for the inhabitants, who apparently never exceeded the present number. Dr. Thomas Young, Bishop of St Davids and afterwards Archbishop of York, was a native of this parish

1847 acc/to The The State of Education in Wales report

“On the 21st December I visited the parish which is a very small one containing only 6 farms and four resident labourers. Their children go to school in Lamphey which is an adjoining parish. The rector was non resident; lives in Pembroke. The rate of wages here was much the same as at Lamphey viz. 8s per week on an average. There was no school of any description in the parish either day or Sunday.”

Hook

Once the centre of coal-mining district. Hook colliery was the last anthracite mine in Pembrokeshire to close, in 1948. Now there are few traces of the mines or railway tracks which once dominated the area, although two old Quays can still be seen. There a few ancient cottages. Most of the village development is modern.

Hubberston- Hakin

In 1894 the civil parish of Hakin was created out of that part of the old civil parish of Hubberston which lay within the urban district of Milford. In the rearrangement the Church of the old civil and ecclesiastical parish of Hubberston fell within the bounds of the new civil parish of Hakin.

Hubberston 1839 Lewis Topographical Dictionary of Wales

HUBBERSTON, a parish, in the poor-law union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Rhôs, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 1 mile (W. by N.) from Milford; containing 1174 inhabitants, of whom 737 are in that part of the parish which is within the borough of Milford. This parish is traversed by the turnpike-road leading from Haverfordwest to Hakin, or Old Milford and is bounded by the parish of Herbrandston on the north, and by that of Steynton on the north-east. It is situated on a creek or inlet of Milford Haven, at the upper end of which are the remains of a religious establishment, formerly called Pill Priory, built upon a pill separating this parish from that of Steynton, and which, though it has obtained the name of Hubberston Priory, is within the limits of Steynton. The parish comprises 1270a. 3r. 9p., whereof about 270 acres are arable, and the remainder pasture, with a few acres of woodland: wheat and barley are the chief produce of the land under tillage, which is very rich and fertile. The seat of Gelliswick is beautifully situated, and embraces rich views of the picturesque scenery of the locality, the more distant views reaching over the harbour of Milford and the fine expanse of the adjacent Haven. St. Botolphs, an elegant modern mansion, erected on the site of some of the buildings of the priory, though not within the parish, closely borders upon it, and is equally remarkable for the style of the building and the beauty of its situation, commanding a pleasing view of the Haven, and of the neighbouring country: nearly the whole of the farm attached to the estate is situated within the parish of Hubberston. Boat-building is carried on to a considerable extent at Hakin, or Old Milford in the parish, and about 200 ship wrights reside at that place, which is included within the boundaries of the new contributory borough of Milford.

The living is a rectory, rated in the King's Books at £6. 2. 8½., and in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £180, and there is a glebe of nine acres, valued at £18 per annum; also a glebe-house. The Church, dedicated to St David, is a small, ancient, and venerable structure, in the early style of English architecture, with a lofty square embattled tower: in the chancel are three elegantly canopied recesses, probably intended for the officiating priests, or perhaps appropriated to the dignitaries of the priory on particular occasions. The parsonage house was rebuilt and greatly improved at the expense of the late rector. A Church Sunday school is supported; and there are places of worship for Wesleyans and Calvinistic Methodists, with a Sunday school held in each of them. Mr. Thomas Roch, in 1707, bequeathed a small rent-charge for teaching poor children, and for the relief of distressed housekeepers of the parish; and in 1752, Mr. James Allen bequeathed £50 in money, to be invested in the purchase of land, and the rent distributed among the poor: the bequests produce about £3 a year

Church of St David's.

This rectory belonged to the Priory of Pill or Pulla and the dissolution of the Monastery came into the hands of the Crown.

Described as Ecclesia de Villa Huberte this Church was assessed in 1291 at £6 13s 4d - Taxatio. There was a Chapel called St Thomas 's, subordinate to Hubberston. This could be the old Chapel then in ruins above the fort at Pill referred to in the "Relation of the Routing of his Majesties forces under the Earl of Carbery" published by order of the House of Commons in 1644.

Hubberston St David: The nave and chancel walls are 13c. The west tower and two chancel windows are 15c. The transepts, vestries, and porch are 19c.

Hubberston Church dedicated to St David RCAM

This parish belonged to the priory of Pill "It was an old vill, being referred to under the name of Villa Hubert in the foundation deed of Pill Priory" (Fenton, Tours p178)

The plan shows a nave 29 ft by 15 ½ ft chancel 21 ½ ft with a recess on either side , and a western tower 17ft by 17 ½ ft. The east window of three lights was regarded by Professor Freeman as "a Fair example of Decorated or more commonly Perpendicular, tracery under a pointed arch" (Arch Camb II iii 175). There is also a single lancet in the south wall of the Chancel. In the south-east corner is a piscina, and between it and the choir recess is a sedilia. In the north wall of the chancel are two pointed niches, the easternmost being 7ft above floor level; both have single lights. The chancel arch is pointed and plain. The nave windows are modern. In the south wall is a pointed doorway now blocked. Facing it in the north wall is the present entrance to the building; and between it and the chancel is a projecting corbel, 8ft from the level of the nave. Both chancel and nave are vaulted. The tower is conspicuous for its height. It is in 5 stages, the turret in the north west angle containing ninety three stairs. The first and second storeys are vaulted. The parapet above the corbel table is not battlemented. The highest storey has two lights in each of the four sides,"round -headed, but to my eye they savour more of cinquecento than of Romanesque " (Freeman). The other floors have plain slits. There is no west door, its place being occupied by a much restored two-light window. The font is of the usual cushion type; its bowl measures outside 24in by 20 in, inside 18in by 16 in; part of an iron hinge and staple remains. It stands on on circular shaft 56 in. in circumference, and has a square base, the full height being 32 in. --- visited 27th July 1920

St David's Church, Hubberston

C15, possibly with earlier core; repaired 1866-7, and restored and enlarged 1929-31. Rubble stone construction with ashlar tracery and slate roofs. Consists of nave, chancel, W tower, and N and S transepts. Fine square C13 font with scalloped edge on circular shaft. Very fine C15 triple sedilia to chancel. Triple arch timber chancel screen with delicate cresting and tracery.

Mrs Bevan's School

This school is held in a poor-house erected by the parish. The whole is in good repair, but the master has only a single room to live in. The master has taught a great many to Read tolerably well but he could not speak English correctly. The scholars were children of farmers, shipwrights, and labourers. 2 desks and 9 benches were the only school furniture.

Some of the Copy books were written tolerably well, but the outsides were very much disfigured with scrawls.

Miss Clunn's school

A room in the house of the parents of the mistress is used as the school-room. The whole of the premises were in excellent repair. Two table, two benches, and two chairs made up the school furniture.

The mistress spoke English well, and appeared an amiable person. The scholars were mechanic's and labourers children. Four of them Read a part of the 17th chapter of St Luke. But could not answer any questions from the chapter Read. Could not repeat the Ten Commandments.

Miss Lifton's School

A small room in the house of her father is the mistress's school room. It was not clean. The furniture consisted only of one table and three benches. The mistress was suffering from asthma. Mechanic's and labourer's children were her scholars. There was only one Testament in school and three little girls Read a verse each in that but could not answer questions. Could not repeat the Ten Commandments.

Mr Merritt's School

A room in the master's dwelling house is the schoolroom. The only school furniture I saw consisted of one desk for the Master. Two tables and three benches. The master spoke English correctly, having been a bookkeeper in a cotton manufactory in Lancashire for many years .

The scholars are shipwrights' and labourers children. Few of them had returned to school since the holidays. The master had only the small income from his school to live upon, except what he got occasionally for making out and auditing accounts for his neighbours who could not do it for themselves.

Rehoboth Sunday school –

I did not visit this school but it is worthy of special note that it is conducted in Welsh, though held in a district where English is exclusively Spoken. The Chapel is frequented mostly by seafaring men from the Welsh districts.

Greville Charles Francis

Grenville C F 1790 Hon. Paterchurch Tower Pembroke Dock Act 30 George III c 5a section 2a 26 survey .

Grenville Charles F 1801 Nov 18 NLW MS 1352b ff357 60.

.founder of Milford Haven town, Pembs. , second son of Francis , earl of Warwick , and his wife Elizabeth Hamilton . He became the agent , and subsequently the heir, of his mother's brother, Sir William Hamilton 1730 - 1803 , who had succeeded to a considerable estate in South Pembrokeshire through his marriage with Catherine Barlow of Colby d. 1782 . In 1790 Hamilton obtained a private act of parliament which enabled him to develop his property in the manors of Hubberston and Pill , to build Quays, docks, piers, to establish a Market, provide roads, etc. Since he was absent from the country as British minister at the court of Naples 1764-1800 he entrusted the carrying out of the scheme to Greville . To this task Greville devoted himself with great energy. He built a custom-house for the convenience of shipping and an inn for the accommodation of passengers to Ireland . He invited several families of American Quakers , who had been engaged in South Sea whaling from Nantucket Island , Massachusetts , to settle at Milford . The first of them arrived in 1793 and for some years they carried on trade in spermaceti oil which had been used as an illuminant in London . He also induced the navy board to commission the building of frigates, the first contracts being signed in April 1797 . In the town itself, which was laid out in three Streets parallel with one another, he had a Church built which was consecrated in 1808 and dedicated to S. Katherine . A Friends' meeting house was opened in 1811 in the enclosure where many members of the American immigrants are buried. Greville also projected a school or College of navigation provided with an observatory , which was never completed. He staged a first-class piece of publicity for his new town by inducing Sir William and Lady Hamilton , accompanied by Lord Nelson , to visit it in Aug. 1802 . The event, coinciding with the anniversary of the battle of the Nile , was celebrated by a cattle-show, sports, regatta, and a banquet at which Nelson made a speech in which he highly praised Greville 's achievements. The presence of Lady Hamilton 1765 - 1815 , née Amy Lyon and more generally known as Emma Hart , naturally attracted much attention. In her youth she had been a protégée of Greville . It was he who introduced her to his friend Romney , whose portrait studies of her are so well known. She subsequently went to Naples and in 1791 became the second wife of Sir William Hamilton .

After the death of Greville in April 1809 , the new town entered upon a period of depression. Greville was succeeded by his younger brother

Greville Robert Fulke 1751 - 1824 sometime equerry to King George III . He took but a tepid interest in his brother's projects. When the Admiralty proposed to purchase the site of the dockyard, for which it had been paying a yearly rent, he refused to accept its valuation. It was therefore decided to transfer the establishment to a site at Paterchurch , higher up the Haven and on the opposite side. This transfer was effected in 1814 and thus was founded Pembroke Dock , which remained a royal dockyard for over a century. The demand for spermaceti oil was struck a fatal blow by the growing use of coal gas as an illuminant.

RCAM Fort Hubberston

Fort Hubberston was built in the early 1860s on the north bank of the estuary opposite Fort Popton. It was used during the First and Second World Wars but was later abandoned. —See The Milford Haven Fortifications

Long Stone RCAM

On a field known as Long Stone half a mile due north of the parish Church of Hubberston is a standing stone 72 inches above the ground. Prostrate at the base and largely hidden in the soil, are the vestiges of two similar stones ; one of these was standing when the monument was visited for the survey of the county (c1890). A cromlech would seem to have stood on the spot, of which the stones were doubtless part – visited 27th July 1920

Long Stone Burial Chamber Hubberston

Monument consists of an upright boulder, 1.8m high, probably damaged at some time in the past at the top. If this stone is part of a burial chamber, it is presumably a side stone. There is little other sign of the chamber itself.

Hundleton

Hundleton -- Parish of Monkton

--Small Anglo-Norman village near Orielton the 18c home of the Owen family- who came from Anglesey-

An inhabited site since the Bronze age- several round barrows nearby [Dry Barrows]
Original yellow & black AA sign 1933

The Parish Church Hundleton

(6 in. Ord. Surv. sheet, Pem. 39 S.E).

The Church is a modern building a low red brick with red pantile roof Church- Ellery Anderson- Cheltenham -architect

The village of Hundleton is situated about a mile and a half south west of Monkton, and the Church of St David Hundleton is a good half mile further on the Angle and Castlemartin road. This Church today is the only other Church within the Parish of Monkton.

The site was given by Colonel Morgan James Saurin of Orielton, and was conveyed to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners on November 30th, 1891

The Church was licensed as "Holy Trinity".

The following is a report taken from the Archdiaconal Magazine of the opening of the first Church. The Vicar was Canon Bowen .

"The event of the month to be recorded in our Magazine is the opening of the Iron Chapel of Ease at Hundleton, which took place on Monday, November 23rd.

The service commenced at 7.30, but long before the hour of opening the little Church was crowded, many— indeed it was said by some that there were as many outside as inside—were unable to gain admission. The Vicar Read the service, the lessons being taken by the Rural Dean, the Rev. I. G. Lloyd , Rector of Bosherston, and the Rev. W. J. Price, curate. An excellent and appropriate sermon was preached by the Venerable the Archdeacon of St Davids. The service was hearty and Congregational. The singing on the occasion was taken by the choir of the Priory Church, and was given with excellent effect. Mr. Edmunds presided at the harmonium. The collection amounted to close upon £14, which was very good.

The building is neat and very well arranged. That it may become the centre of much spiritual activity should be the prayer of everyone.

It is much to be regretted that Colonel and Mrs Saurin, who took such all active part in the erection of this Church should be leaving home so soon after the opening to Winter abroad. We are sure all wish their sojourn abroad to be a very happy one.

1934 The present Church was built. The Vicar was the Rev Tudor Evans and the foundation stone was laid on Saturday July 8th 1933 by the Lord Bishop of St David's

Mr and Mrs W G Wynne of Mellaston had materially helped in the provision of the building. The new Church was consecrated on January 6th 1934

Cost £1500 designed by Mr Ellery Anderson , architect of Cheltenham, builders Messrs Sidney G Thomas and Son , builders of Pembroke.

Hundleton - The Parish Hall

October 1921 a plot of land was conveyed by Mr. Henry Williams to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners in deed of gift, and some time later Mr. Davies of Crickmarren presented the Parish Hall to be erected on this site. Curate and congregation then got to work together to dig out the foundations, and prepare the site. This Hall has since been of the utmost use to the churchgoers of Hundleton Village, and the social functions which do so much to add to neighbourliness in a small village have always had an assured venue, thanks to this generous gift of land. The first Organ, which had been presented to the Church by Mrs. Wynne of Mellaston, has now found a home in the Hall and was replaced by a new Organ

Hundleton Calvinistic Methodist Chapel.

Formed early in the 19c when services were held in the cottage on the site of which the Chapel was built in 1820 but was not as a separate Church till 1845 and was linked to Bethel at Pembroke and Walleston in Pullcrochan parish under the pastorate of Rev W Powell. The first Chapel was built in 1820 and the second in 1879, after the first became too small, at a cost of £750. The first deacons of Hundleton were William Griffiths, John Griffiths and George James. This John Griffiths was one who loaned £10 free of interest towards the building of the Neyland Zion Chapel.

Subsequent deacons included William John, James Long (who was very outspoken) William Tasker, William Richards, William Davies, and John Davies who became the first caretaker of the Victoria Nurses Home Pembroke Dock.

In 1851 Services were held in the afternoon and evening with an average afternoon congregation of 100

Any records would appear to have been held either by Bethel or Walleston.

A small hamlet in the south of the parish which in its name preserves the existence of the Chapel of Crug Marren, a building in ruins in Fenton's time (Tour, P 375). In 1259 it was appropriated to Monkton Priory Church by Richard Carew Bishop of St Davids.—visited, 24th May, 1922.

A field belonging to Moreston Farm. The reason for the name is not apparent, but a closely adjacent field is also called Cross Park; both names suggest the former presence of a cross in the neighbourhood.—visited, 23rd May, 1922.

Maidenwells Calvanistic Methodist Chapel-- Gilead

The first Chapel was built in 1846 but preaching had been occurring in homes for some time before that. At first this Chapel was a branch of Gershom Pembroke Dock but was later linked with the pastorate of Wallaston and Bethel St Twinnels parish. In 1851 the congregation was as large as 95 for the afternoon services

Jeffreston, Jeffreyston

Jeffreston today

– Rural village served by a primary school with in excess of 100 pupils in modern building on Glebe land within half mile of Jeffreyston Church. Transport to Secondary School at Tenby (6 miles). Public House in village. Public bus service twice daily to Tenby and Pembroke Dock. Doctor's Surgeries at Kilgetty (3 miles) and Saundersfoot (4 miles). Mothers Union meetings are held monthly, a Craft Club meets weekly with various social and fund raising events held intermittently. Sunday School is held in the Church Hall every Sunday morning with the pupils and teachers joining the Church congregation for Eucharist.

St. Jeffrey and St. Oswald's Church as it is today is the result of a rebuilding in 1867/8 although the tall, tapering medieval tower may be 14th century. The porch is particularly large with a stone entrance arch. There is a very rare medieval preaching cross on the south side with arms of unequal length. The Church is beautifully decorated and in good repair.

Jeffreston 1839 Topographical Dictionary of Wales

Jeffreston a parish, in the union and hundred of Narberth, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 7 miles (S. by W,) from Narberth; contains 644 inhabitants. The village is pleasantly situated on a well-wooded eminence, and forms a conspicuous and interesting feature in the views from the adjacent parts of the country. Near the turnpike-road from Narberth to Pembroke, which passes through the parish, and about half-way between Creswell-Quay and the Church, is Cresselly, a seat surrounded with luxuriant plantations.

Coal&Culm

The substrata of the parish are stone coal and culm, which have been wrought to a very great extent, and still continue to be procured, though on a smaller Scale. The mines are thought to be nearly exhausted, but it is probable that, by carrying the shaft to a greater depth, an abundant supply may still be obtained. The coal is conveyed by a tram road to the pier at Saundersfoot, on Carmarthen bay, and there shipped for the coast of Cardigan shire, &c.; many tons of the large coal are carried thence to the London Market, for malting purposes, it being free from all bituminous qualities. Previously [1834] the coal was shipped at Creswell Quay, in a branch of the Milford Haven extending for a mile and a half to the south and partly in this parish, for the coast of Sussex in vessels of about 80 tons burden.

The living is a vicarage, rated in the King's Books at £4. 17. 6., and endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant; present net income, £134; patrons and impropiators, the Dean and Chapter of St Davids. The Church, dedicated to St. Jeffrey and St. Oswald, is not distinguished by any remarkable architectural features. A school, erected in 1835, and conducted on the National system, is principally supported by the family at Cresselly; and a Sunday school is also held in connexion with the Church.

The Old Parish Churches of South West Wales -- Mike Salter 1994.

East of the north transept with a squint is a narrow Chapel of two bays, whilst west of the transept is a square Chapel or vestry. On the south side is another narrow Chapel of two bays with a vault. These parts have no datable features. The west tower and vaulted porch are probably 15c. There were no north windows prior to the Victorian restoration. A churchyard cross lies nearby.

The Church of St Oswald and St Geoffrey Jeffreston

June 29 1867 from Arch Camb 1888

This Church was in course of restoration, just begun, when visited. It consists of a nave and chancel, north and south transept, and a small Chapel south of the chancel, western tower and south porch. The tower is a characteristic one of the Flemish district, tapering, strong built with battlement and corbel table, and a square turret at the north east having slit lights; no string of buttress; the belfry single obtuse lights, some mere slits, and a west window. The tower has the common rude vault within, and a pointed arch to the nave. The north transept is larger than the southern, but both low and insignificant; the arches to both very rude and course; that on the north obtuse and misshapen, that on the south so flat as scarcely to be really an arch. The south transept is vaulted. The chancel arch is a plain pointed one. The chancel is entered by an ascent of three high steps. The east window, as well as most others, is vilely modernised, and on the north of the chancel are no windows. The south Chapel is divided from the chancel by a quasi arch flat and rude; in the south Chapel is a debased square headed window. In the south transept are some stone brackets, and near the south door, internally a benatura. The font has a square bowl, scalloped at the base, on a short cylindrical stem. The porch is very large, and vaulted, has plain outer door, and stone seats. The south front has a curious effect, the porch, transept, and Chapel south of the chancel all having similar gables ranged together, the porch perhaps the largest.

In the churchyard is a cross entire on a step.

Restoration by Mr Talbot Bury completed in 1868; good eastern window put in; north transept enlarged to the dimensions of the nave, from which it is divided by three pointed arches on cylindrical pillars, copied from Castlemartin Church; low rounded arch introduced to divide the south Chapel from the south transept.

RCAM The Parish Church dedicated to SS Oswald and Jeffrey

The Taxatio of 1291 describes this Church as “Ecclesia de ville Galfri” when it was assessed at £5 for tenths to the King. The Elizabethan communion cup is inscribed : POCVLVM . ECCLESIE . DE . GEFFRESTON.

The building consists of nave 25 ½ ft by 13 ½ ft, north aisle, chancel 24ft by 12ft with small south Chapel, south transept 9 ½ ft by 9 ft, tower 13ft square, and south porch. The north transept, which, at restoration in 1867, was incorporated into a new Nave aisle, connects with the chancel by a squint 5 ½ ft high and 7 1/2ft wide. The south transept is vaulted. All the windows are modern; the north side of the unrestored Church was windowless. The tower tapers slightly to a corbel table, surmounted by high battlements; there is no string course. It has three stories, the lowest being roughly vaulted. The Bell chamber is lighted by slits there is no apparent opening into the Church. The ground floor chamber has a west window, but no door; it opens to the nave by a pointed arch. The porch is vaulted has stone seats and a small stoup. The font is of the usual cushion type; the bowl 24 in square, exterior, interior 19in, is placed on a short circular shaft and base. In the churchyard is a cross 8ft high standing on a shaft and base of 3 steps; the cross head is modern – visited 25th May 1915.

Cross Incised Stones

During some recent reparations to the porch a much worn stone bearing an incised cross was found doing duty at the threshold. It has been removed and fixed against the inner wall of the porch. The cross of the form common to the 8th or 9th century when the cross was placed within a circle is 6in in diameter; the vertical arm is extended down the pillar to the extent of 13 ½ in The ends of the cross arms are slightly widened. It bears no inscription.

A few yards north west of the rectory house, a former rector of the parish placed a rude cross shaped stone found on the razing of an old "clom" built cottage which stood near. George Harris, churchwarden, remembered this cross stone forming part of a bench at a cottage door. On the bench coffin bearers invariably rested their burden on the way to the parish churchyard. The raised surface of the cross shows signs of wear; it has a length of 21in an width of 15in at the arms and a breadth of 6in —Glynne Notes (Arch Camb 1888 V v 136) RCAM 1915

Pembrokeshire Parsons.

This Church appears to have originally belonged to the priory of Pembroke and together with the Church of St. Issell's was granted by William, prior of Pembroke, and his consent, to the Canons of St Davids, subject to the payment of an annual pension 2s. from each of the two churches to the prior of Pembroke. - Stat. Menev. This grant must have been made between 28 Jan., 1331, (as John Savage was at that date prior of Pembroke. - Pay Rolls), and Aug., 1339, as on the latter date Henry Gower, Bishop of St Davids, with the Consent at his chapter, united the trio churches to question on account of their poverty, and ordained that the Church at St. Issell's should be served by a vicar to be presented by the chapter, and that the Church of "Villa Galfredi" [Jeffreyston] should be served by a chaplain. How long this union of Jeffreyston with St. Issell's continued is unknown, but it is certain that it was dissolved before 1534.

Described as " Ecclesia de Villa Galfri, this Church was in 1291 assessed at £5 for tenths to the King, the amount payable being 10s – Taxatio.

It appears from the accounts of William Waryn, communarius of St Davids Cathedral, that in 1490 the tithes of Jeffreyston and St. Issells were leased to Mr. David Wogan at a rent of £10. Later on the tithes of each living appear to have been leased separately. On 20 July, 1555, a lease of the tithes of Jeffreyston was granted to David Nash of Carmarthen, gent., for 50 years, at a rent of £4 yearly to the chapter, and £4 13s. 4d. to the vicar of the parish.

On 27 July, 1682, a lease of these tithes was granted to George Lucy, esq., for 21 years at a rent of £64, the tenant to provide and pay a curate to perform the services at the Church. Exactly four years later, the same George Lucy obtained a lease for 21 years (presumably on a surrender of the previous lease) at the same rent, but with power to dig for coal for his own use on payment of 2d. rent for it.

On 27 July, 1698, a lease of the tithes for 21 years was granted to Elizabeth Lucy, widow of Mr. George Lucy at a rent of £4; she also had the right to dig for coal for her own use at a rent of 2d.; for this lease a fine of £40 was paid -

Mrs. Lucy in 1719 sold this lease to Mr. Duncan Baynes, a surgeon at Pembroke, in whose family it continued till 1766, when it was assigned to Mr. Allen of Cresselly. Mr. Allen renewed the lease in 1771 at a rent of £14 a year, and for this paid a fine of £40.

The lease expired in 1806, and Mr. Allen having declined to again rent the tithes, they were leased to Hugh Barlow, MP., for 21 years at a rack rent of £155 per annum.

According to the Diocesan Report in 1809, the yearly value of this benefice arising from augmentation fixed stipend, and surplice fees was £47 19s.

On 24 July, 1867, consent was given by the chapter of St Davids for the rebuilding of Jeffreyston Church. It was restored in 1868; a good east window was put in and the north transept was enlarged to the dimensions of the nave - Arch Camb.

At a wedding in Jeffreyston Church in March 1863, the Bell ringers arrived expecting to perform the usual service but they were turned away by the groom who didn't want them and what is more didn't want to pay them. The Bell-ringers had their revenge however. As the happy couple left the Church they did so to the bells tolling a funeral knell.

Coal Culm and Cresswell Quay

The term Jeffreyston colliery might be a general description of all the coal workings in the parish of Jeffreyston under various managements

The seams at Jeffreyston were so distorted by geological movement being folded and eroded to outcrop in a broad band running from just east of the village westward to the river at Cresswell. Coal thus exposed was accessible in large quantities by means of shallow workings, easily transported along the higher ground and down to the Quays at Cresswell. None of the seams attained any depth. Most of the coal mined was culm useful for lime burning but which was not so profitable.

16c parish of Jefferson significant producer of coal of some antiquity with established measures used in the coal trade PRO E178/3493

Jeffreyston village centred on a Church of early Christian origin is located on a low ridge four kilometres to the east of Cresswell Quay with coal outcropping to the north and south, the north rising of the Timber vein, striking a little north of west, has been worked at outcrop in Underhill wood immediately north of the village, and westward for over a kilometre. Working was by means of wide trenches, known locally as “reens”, now heavily overgrown and hidden in mature woodland. The ancient (medieval and earlier) enclosure pattern to the north forms a fan pattern with each of its segments having access at its northern end to a section of the coal outcrop, while a section of early enclosure to the west appears to give access of the vein at its south western extremities.

West of Jeffreyston over a distance of approximately two kilometres the coal seams have been worked by trenches Some of these are extensive where the veins have been folded to give coal close to the surface over a large area. North of Sunnyhill, one kilometre west of the village there is an area of open working 300 by 200 meters with another 600 meters further west which must have been worked before the 1800's. This is shown on early maps as being a flooded pit. Owen 1603, refers only to underground workings around Jeffreyston.---Coastal Mining landscape of South west Britain – Cloughton

Beacon Hill Enclosure

On the field known as Rath Park near Beacon Hill House is the faint outline of a circular enclosure. The rampart has a present height of only 1ft above the surrounding level. The diameter of the enclosure is about 130ft; the entrance was to the west. The surrounding ditch has been filled up. To the north of the enclosure and separated from it by a hedge are the vestiges of a possible mound which local tradition asserts to have been the site of a beacon --visited 25th May 1915

Rath Hill Enclosure

At the western corner of a field known locally as Hill or Rath Hill on which stands Cresselly schoolhouse is a circular earthwork. Although reduced in size by cultivation the enclosed rampart is plainly visible about one foot above the surrounding surface. The area within it has a diameter of about 150ft. Slight indications of the ditch remain. The entrance was to the south-west. A perfectly formed spindle whorl 1 ½ in in diameter, now in the museum of the Carmarthenshire Antiquarian Society was discovered here in the year 1912 – visited 25th May 1915.

Rath

In the fields adjacent to Whitehouse Farm 1 ¼ miles west of Jeffreyston village are the traces of a circular earthwork known as the Rath. The enclosing rampart is intact but the ditch has practically disappeared. The entrance was apparently towards the east. The enclosed area is in diameter about 100ft; it is perfectly flat. A small circular enclosed area within the bank is of modern construction – visited 25th May 1915

Gallows Tree Park.

St Jeffrey & St Oswald's Church, Jeffreston;Jeffreyston

Medieval & later parish Church, restored 1867, located in Jeffreyston village . Located within the porch is a 1.2m by 0.25m cross-incised slab, formerly in use as a threshold stone, thought to be early medieval.

Jeffreston Sunday School was built during the early nineteenth century and still in use as a Sunday School in 1907.

Great House, Jeffreyston,

A large T-plan 3 storey house with rendered white-painted elevations, gable roofs and small sash windows. Thought to originate from the 16th century.

Jeffreston Methodist Chapel

Built before 1820 and converted into a private dwelling during the late twentieth century.

Enclosure Vicarage farm

A roughly circular enclosure, 40m in diameter, defined by a bank and by traces of a ditch. The site is set on a slight slope below the crest of a ridge and is obscured to the South by a modern lane.

Johnston

Village South of Haverfordwest where the A4076 crosses the railway

Church - Classic "Little England" building with tall tower.

1839 Topographical Dictionary of Wales --Johnston --Lewis

Johnston, a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Rhôs, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 3¼ miles (S. S. W.) from Haverfordwest, on the road to Milford; containing 289 inhabitants. The environs of this place are pleasant, and contain some agreeable scenery, with several respectable seats. Johnston Hall an ancient mansion, was for a long time the residence of the late Lord Kensington. The lands, which are all freehold, are chiefly inclosed, and in a good state of cultivation.

Culm

The parish abounds with culm and limestone; the former is worked for the supply of the neighbourhood, and the latter also on a limited Scale, chiefly to be burnt for manure.

The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated with the living of Steynton, rated in the King's Books at £2. 0. 5., and in the patronage of the Crown; present net income of the benefice, £322. The tithes of Johnston parish have been commuted for a rent-charge of £105, and the glebe comprises twenty-five acres, valued at £25 per annum; with a glebe-house. The Church is not distinguished by any peculiar architectural features. There is a place of worship for Baptists. A National school was erected in 1834, at the expense of the late J. Bowen , esq., of Johnston, together with a grant from the National Society; and two Sunday schools are held, one of them in connexion with the Church, and the other with the Baptist denomination.

Johnston is named after the late 12c knight John de Rupe whose son Thomas built the Church in the early 13c. The nave and chancel doorways may be that early. The chancel doorway was soon blocked and two sedilia built against it on the inside. There are tiny transepts and beside them are recesses. a piscina was discovered in the south transept in the restoration of 1908. The chancel has 15c windows and has a chancel arch with narrow openings either side.

Acc to RCAM

This parish doubtless originated with the manorial settlement of John de Rupe in the later half of the 12 century, and the Church was probably erected by John's son Thomas , who subsequently conveyed it to the priory of Pill, an offshoot of the abbey of St Dogmael. The Church consists of a chancel 19ft by 13 ½ ft with vaulted recesses at the western end of the north and south walls; nave 33 ½ ft by 16 ft with equal sized north and south transepted Chapels 8 ½ ft by 6ft ; and west tower 12ft square by 46 ½ ft high to the parapet. The only entrance is by a doorway near the end of the south wall. In the north wall opposite there is another blocked up doorway; both doors are of the Early English period. The chancel windows are Perpendicular. In the south wall is a piscina under a pointed niche, and to the west of it a sedilia of two pointed chamfered arches supported on a plain central shaft. The outer wall behind the sedilia shows traces of a priest's door which was blocked when the sedilia were inserted. On either side of the altar are rude shelves or credence tables which project 9 inches from the wall and have a thickness of 3 ½ inches. That to the north is perfect; its companion has been mutilated. The chancel arch is plain pointed with chamfered Angles; above it are three projecting corbels which carry the roof. On either side of the chancel arch is a squint, giving a full view of the altar from both transepts. Both squints are rounded above and lighted by windows of similar character to the east window of the chancel.

A restoration in 1908 revealed a piscina beneath the windows of the south transept, indicating a chantry altar. The north transept is now screened off for use as a vestry. The nave is three steps below the outside level. The font stands on a low stone platform at the end of the nave. It is of the usual cushion type 24 inches by 23 inches externally and 19 inches by 18 inches internally, and is supported on a low circular shaft 52 inches in circumference with a square base. The tower tapers slightly to the corbel table; the plain parapet seen by Sir Stephen Glynne in 1852 has been battlemented. The turret in the south west angle carries 66 stairs. There are three storeys; the lowest which opens into the nave is vaulted, and has a west window of two square headed lights. There is no west door. The belfry chamber is lighted on the north, south and west sides by Perpendicular windows, well executed in Bath stone and louvred with tiles.; The east side has an oblong slit.

This Church contains a singularly fine cross slab, now forming part of the chancel step which has apparently escaped previous notice. It is hidden from view by a movable kneeling board. The stone 68 inches by 20 inches has an incised cross with floriated arms, rising from a calvary of four steps, the entire length being 53 inches. It dates from the period 1550-1600.

The oak communion rails are a good example of mid 17th century work; they were restored in 1909

1878 Pembrokeshire Churches.— Johnston. J. Romilly Allen.

Situation. — The village of Johnston consists of a few scattered houses lying on the high road between Haverfordwest and Milford at a distance of three miles and a half from the former town, and three and a quarter from the latter. The scenery is bleak and wild, with scarcely a vestige of foliage. The land lies high, commanding an extensive view of the surrounding country on all sides, and the weather-beaten Church harmonises singularly well with the landscape.

General Outline. — Deprived of the advantages of ornament, and built of rough materials, the Pembrokeshire Church is wholly dependent on the beauty of its proportions and the picturesqueness of its outline for any charm it may happen to possess. The tower, whose relative height is considerably increased by the lowness of the main body of the Church, and by the absence of string-courses, forms the most important feature. But there is another striking characteristic which must not be passed over, and which contributes in no small degree to the general effect, viz., the great number of small projections and jutting gables, which occupy the position of transepts, as will afterwards be explained when dealing with the interior.

Ground-Plan. — The ground-plan is simple, and is symmetrically disposed on each side of the centre line, its component elements consisting of nave, chancel, and tower at west end, opening into nave. There is no porch. Transepts and aisles are absent; but their want is to a certain extent supplied by vaulted projections on the north and south sides of the nave and chancel, next the chancel-arch. The interior dimensions of the plan are as follows : Nave, 33 ft. 4 ins. by 16 ft. ; chancel, 19 ft. by 13 ft. 8 ins.; nave-recesses, 8 ft. 6 ins. by 6 ft.; chancel-recesses, 7 ft. 5 ins. by 2 ft. 8 ins.; tower, 6 ft. by 8 ft.

Tower Exterior. — In describing the ground-plan it has been stated that the tower is situated at the west end of the Church, which is the most usual arrangement, especially when the plan is otherwise symmetrical, as in the present instance. The stair-turret occupies the north-west angle, and appears, outwardly, simply as a square buttress-like projection of the early Norman type, being, in fact, nothing more than a mere thickening of the masonry to the extent of from 12 to 15 ins., in order to allow more room for the circular stair within.

The chief peculiarities of the true Pembrokeshire tower are, want of corner or other buttresses, absence of horizontal divisions, batter of the sides, and general resemblance to military architecture. The only horizontal lines in this case are, a rude string-course on the east side, level with the point of the nave-roof (probably for keeping out the wet where the roof abuts against the tower, and the corbel-table running round the top, but stopping short at the stair-turret. Mr. Freeman says of these towers, (Arch Camb, 1852, p. 167.) " Not being divided into stages, they depend in a more direct manner than usual upon their actual proportions, and I may add, are amongst the most difficult I know of to sketch with accuracy. " The batter of the walls, although considerable, is by no means easy to estimate, as any one may ascertain who will take the trouble to walk round one of these towers, and try to settle in his mind which side deviates most from the vertical, for there certainly is a difference in the amount of slope of the several faces. In addition, the batter is not always the same the whole way up, being sometimes greater at the base. The general effect produced by the varying batter, combined with well chosen proportions, is of an exceedingly subtle and pleasing kind, fully justifying the theory that the beauty of any object is in a large measure dependent upon the difficulty experienced in detecting in what that beauty lies.

Tower Interior. — In the inside the tower is divided into three stages by rude ungroined vaulting, of domical shape. The lowest stage opens into the nave of the Church, and was originally lighted by a small Perpendicular window, which is, however, at present blocked up. A narrow winding stair gives access to the storeys above. The second stage measures 6 ft. 3 ins. square, and has a circular hole 3 ft. in diameter in the centre of the floor, through which the bells might be raised. There is a corresponding hole in the floor above. Half way up the side of this compartment is a door from the staircase, which would seem to indicate that it was intended to put a timber floor at this level.

If, as is generally supposed, these towers were used for defensive purposes, this would doubtless be the portion set apart, in case of need, for a place of refuge.

That there was a strong door to the staircase is evidenced by the recess in the wall of this chamber, for it to fit into when open. The windows of this story are mere slits, like those in the stair turret. The belfry forms the top stage of the tower, and contains one small modern Bell. It is lighted on the north, south, and west sides by Perpendicular windows, well executed, in Bath stone, and louvred with slates, to allow the sound to escape. There is nothing to show that these windows are later insertions ; and, if this be the case, it fixes the date as being subsequent to that of the rest of the Church. The east side of the belfry is pierced by an oblong window, with simply chamfered edges. Some idea of the level of the different stories may be obtained from the number of steps in the winding stair, which are as follows : — From ground floor to first stage, 22 steps ; ground floor to door halfway up first stage, 36 steps ; ground floor to belfry, 50 steps ; ground floor to roof, 66 steps. The total height of the tower, from ground to top of parapet, is 46 ft. 6 ins., and, as the parapet is 3 ft. high, this gives a rise of 8 ins. for each step.

Church Interior. — Johnston Church has been lucky enough to have escaped, up to the present time, the ravages of the ubiquitous restorer, and still presents that primitive appearance which is so dear to the lover of ancient art. The whitewashed walls are as yet untouched, and still preserving all the beautiful tones of colour and gradations of shade which age and dust can alone produce.

Piers and Arches. — The chancel arch is a plain pointed one, 8 ft. 2 ins. span, with chamfered edges. On the north and south side of the chancel are two recesses, covered with ordinary barrel vaulting, and measuring 7 ft. 5 ins. by 2 ft. 8 ins. Opening out of the nave next the chancel arch are two similar vaulted recesses, situated opposite to each other, but of larger dimensions, 8 ft. 6 ins. by 6 ft. The object of these recesses, which are so common a feature in most of the Pembrokeshire churches, is very doubtful. Mr. Freeman speaks of them as " holes and corners", and scarcely vouchsafes them any further consideration. As the recesses occur almost always in the neighbourhood of the chancel arch, it may be reasonably supposed that one use at least they may have been applied to was to allow of a larger number of persons looking through the squints. In several of the farmhouses near St David s, recesses of an almost identical nature will be found, either covered with barrel vaulting or more commonly with huge slabs of slate. They measure, on an average, about 6 ft. square, and give a very curious appearance to the interior. This fact is here brought forward to show that the method of building seems to have been a local peculiarity, dictated by climate, material, or some other consideration, rather than as indicating any tendency towards mysterious ritual.

Doors. — Johnston Church has no porches, but there are two Pointed Early English doorways in the north and south walls of the nave, placed exactly opposite each other. A similar arrangement occurs in the neighbouring Church of Camrose, and perhaps in some other instances. These doorways, though of dressed stone, are not carved or moulded in any way, being only chamfered. There is a priest's door, 5 ft. high by 2 ft. 4 ins. broad, built up in the south wall of the chancel, and situated directly behind the sedilia, which would therefore appear to be a subsequent addition.

Windows. — The east window of the chancel is Pointed, and filled in with Perpendicular tracery, consisting of two mullions, dividing it into three cusped lights, and then again above the centre of each of these lights three smaller mullions. There is only one small Perpendicular two-light window on the north side of the chancel, placed in the vaulted recess. In the south wall, at the east end, is another small Perpendicular two-light window, and a similar one in the vaulted recess, corresponding to that on the opposite side. The windows of the nave are symmetrically arranged opposite each other. The most elaborate ones are placed in the two vaulted recesses, and are of the same pattern as the east window. The remaining windows, with the exception of that on the west side of the north door, are small Perpendicular double lights, each about 9 ins. broad. The other window appears to be Early English, and consists of two very bluntly pointed lights, 12 ins. broad by 2 ft. 10 ins. high, separated by a single mullion 5 ins. broad.

Roofs. — The roofs are modern, but of good workmanship.

Ecclesiology.

Sedilia and Piscina. — On the south side of the chancel are the sedilia and piscina. The sedilia are ornamented with two pointed and chamfered arches, supported on a light central shaft. The piscina is also covered by a pointed niche, and is in a good state of preservation.

Credence Tables. — On each side of the altar is a credence table, consisting of a slab 4 ins. thick, with levelled edges and octagonal corners projecting 10 ins. from the wall. The one on the south side is broken, but the other is perfect.

Squints. — At both sides of the chancel arch will be observed squints of more elaborate design than usual, consisting of a perpendicular panel 2 ft. 2 ins. broad by 2 ft. 2 ins. high, pierced with two pointed lancets 9 ins. by 2 ft. The splay of the wall beyond is necessarily arranged so as to allow of a full view of the altar. Just above the squint on the north side is a moulded bracket, projecting 7 ins. from the wall, perhaps intended for supporting an image. There are several corbels projecting from the walls in different places, but a group of three together above the top of the chancel arch is especially noticeable. These may have been for the rood gallery.

Font. — The font occupies its original position at the west end of the nave, close to the tower. It is of the pattern so universal in these Pembrokeshire churches, and consists of a short shaft of large diameter, supporting a Norman cushion capital, hollowed out to form the bowl. The size of the square stone out of which the bowl is cut is 2 ft. by 2 ft. 1 ins., by 1 ft. 2 ins. deep.

J. Romilly Allen.

1862 August Glynne

A very nice specimen of the Pembrokeshire Church, having a nave, small transeptal Chapels, chancel, and west tower, but no porch. The tower resembles that of Steynton, except that it has no battlement, but a corbel-table under the parapet. It is undivided by string courses, and is tall and slender, without buttresses, and having a small turret at the south-west. There is no west door, the west window is square-headed, and the north and south belfry-windows are of two lights, the western closed. The windows of the nave, which have been nicely restored, are square-headed, of two lights, and Third Pointed character.

The transeptal Chapels are extremely small and shallow, vaulted in stone, and with very flat arches. The windows of the transepts are square-headed, of three lights. The chancel-arch is a very plain pointed one.

On each side of it is a hagioscope of Third Pointed character, with open paneling. On the north and south sides of the chancel are small vaulted projections opening by very flat arches, and lighted by square-headed windows. These occur in other Pembrokeshire churches. Whether they were sepulchral or not, it is difficult to say. There is another on the north side, ranging with the sacristy, now made into a pew. These have, externally, sloping roofs. On the south side of the chancel are two Pointed sedilia with shafts, and also a piscina, with round basin, under the window. The east window is Third Pointed. The font is a square bowl, scalloped. This Church is in neat order, having lately undergone some restoration and improvement ; and the situation, on an eminence, is very pleasing.

1895 Nooks and Corners Of Pembrokeshire. Timmins

The next station is Johnston, where we will break our journey and take a peep at the Church, whose steeple we descry as the train approaches the station. The little structure stands, with a few cottages grouped around it, at a corner of the lanes; and its gray, time-worn stones make a pretty picture amidst their setting of fresh Green foliage.

At the western end of the Church rises a small but ancient tower, with roof fast falling to decay. The lower part is solid, but towards the top it is pierced with a quartette of graceful, traceried windows, of which three have been blocked up; while the only Bell the Church could boast lies broken in two on the stone floor.

Small as it is, the Church has shallow projecting bays, or Chapels, after the manner of double transepts. Between them rises the chancel arch, devoid of features save a quaint, square-headed opening on either side, enclosing two small pointed arches.

The interior, with its two-decker pulpit, simple box -pews and ancient font, has a quiet, old-world look; and the chancel, raised one step only above the body of the Church, contains a double sedilia, a small piscina and a few other early features.

Rumour hath it that the ' restorer,' save the Mark ! already lays his plans for the undoing of this interesting structure. However, as the attention of the Society for the Protection of Ancient Buildings has been given to the subject, we may hope that their praiseworthy efforts to maintain the ancient features of this Church, in their unrestored simplicity, will eventual be crowned with success.

The patronage of this rectory was granted by Thomas de Rupe (Roch) , the son of John de Rupe , to the prior of Pill. The Church is described in the grant as “ecclesia de villa Johannis.”—Dug. Monas. On the dissolution of the monastic houses the living came into the hands of the Crown in whose patronage it has continued to the present day. It is now annexed to the vicarage of Steynton. The benefice of Steynton appears to have been held by the incumbent of Johnston ever since 1662.

Johnston Baptist Chapel St Peter's Rd, Johnston appears to have been built during the early twentieth century. It is constructed in the modern vernacular style with unpainted rendered walls, a flat asbestos roof, tall small pane flat-headed windows and a gable entry plan. In 2000 it was still in use as a Chapel.

National School -

The school-house was erected in 1834 at the expense of the late J Bowen esq. of Johnston, with a grant from the National Society (the master did not know the amount). The building is in tolerable repair, except the roofs and walls. The room is fitted with parallel desks; it is not large enough to accommodate half the scholars on the books.

The following are the principal subscribers :- J H Philipps esq. of Williamston £5; Rev W B Thomas Vicar £2; Mrs Webb Bowen £2; Rev James Morgan £2. the scholars pay 5s, 2s 6d, 1s 6d , and 3d a quarter according to their circumstances. The scholars are for the most part labourers' children.

The master seemed intelligent. The 8th chapter of St Matthew was Read and a few common questions answered. They knew the multiplication tables well.

Johnston Hall Fenton, Tours 1811 p 200

Hence I take the road leading by Johnston, the seat for many years of the late Lord Kensington, but since his death let to a tenant.

There is nothing in the situation to recommend it as an eligible residence, as it lies rather low, close to the great road and in a coal country, therefore a deep clay soil. It was once the possession of the Butlers, a branch of the Butlers of Dunraven. Some of this family occur in the list of sheriffs of the county and are called Butlers of Johnson. One was High Sheriff in the memorable year of the severest conflict between the King and parliament in Pembrokeshire, and in the King's interest, Lieutenant Colonel Butler.

This house, in the possession of the late Lord Kensington, was the scene of great festivity, and being so near the borough he represented in parliament, his table never failed to be supplied with guests proportionate to his hospitality. The venerable peer was a mighty Hunter, and followed the chase with uncommon ardour to the age of 86, when he could vault into his saddle without assistance, and was remarkably upright and active to the last.

He sat in parliament for Haverfordwest, during ten or eleven successive parliaments , and when he died was father of the house. His Lord-ship was descended from the princely stock of Tudor Trevor, and by his father's marriage with Lady Betty Rich, in whom Rich Earl of Warwick's estates centred, was possessed of a noble property in London, Kensington, and different parts of England.

He was created an Irish peer in the year 1776.

It is to be lamented that the present nobleman his son is obliged to seek a residence in a neighbouring county, with so strong an attachment to his own, as it is a material loss to Pembrokeshire, and a great drawback on his own growing popularity.

Jordanston , a parish in Haverfordwest district, Pembroke; 4½ miles SW of Fishguard, and 11 NW of Clarbeston road railway station. Post town, Fishguard, under Haverfordwest. Acres, 1,876. Real property, £1, 398. Pop., 131. Houses, 27. Jordanston House and LlangWarren are chief residences. The living is a rectory in the diocese of St Davids. Value, £91. Patron, Sir J. Cockburn, Bart. The Church is ancient.

Jordanston Topographical Dictionary of Wales 1839 Lewis

Jordanston , a parish, in the poor-law union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Dewisland, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 4 miles (S. W.) from Fishguard; containing 157 inhabitants. This parish appears to have derived its name from an ancient estate within its limits; it is pleasantly situated in the north-western part of the county, and is intersected by a stream which falls into the river Hog. The scenery is agreeably diversified, and the views of the adjacent district comprehend a variety of interesting features. In the parish are, Jordanston, the ancient family mansion of the Vaughans, situated in a retired part of the country, and commanding much pleasing scenery; and Llangwaren, an ancient residence, with an extensive and well-cultivated farm attached to it. The living is a discharged rectory, rated in the King's Books at £6. 3. 9., and endowed with £400 royal bounty; patron, G. G. Vaughan, esq.. The tithes have been commuted for a rent charge of £86, and the glebe comprises six acres, valued at £8 per annum. The Church, dedicated to St. Cwrda, is a small neat edifice. Here are some remains of a circular encampment, generally ascribed to the Danes.

Jordanston Hill Tumulus

This mound does not seem to have been disturbed, otherwise than by repeated ploughings. It has a circumference of about 150 ft and a height of 2ft. Its surface is strewn with white quartz stones which are not perceptible on the surrounding ground. The field on which it stands, and that to the east, are known as “Castles” – visited 29th April 1920.

Jordanston Hall Grade II listed building

Situated just W of Jordanston Church, below the churchyard.

History: Mid to later C18 house of the Vaughan family, probably incorporating a later C17 core.

The estate is recorded in 1326 and 1411, the Gwynn family occupied the house in 1561, and then by marriage it passed to John Vaughan of Linwent Radns. Resident c1655-60. It is likely that the house was rebuilt c1660-70, possibly for Jenkin Vaughan (d1675), it was assessed as having five hearths in 1670. Gwynnne Vaughan inherited 1678, (died 1702); Lewis Vaughan was High Sheriff 1717, (died 1755). His grandson Gwynne Vaughan 2 was resident from 1755, owner from 1770, promoter and then Governor of Fishguard Fort from 1780, prominent in the 1797 French invasion, rebuilt the Church in 1797 and probably remodelled the house. He died in 1808. Gwynne Gill Vaughan (d1837) was High Sheriff 1813, left the estate to Sir James Cockburn Bt (d1852), whose daughter married Sir J.J. Hamilton Bt of Tyrone, who rebuilt the Church 1863 and died 1876. It had 320 acres on the 1843 Tithe Map.

Description: Mid to later C18 house, probably incorporating late C17 core, whitewashed roughcast with slate roofs, and roughcast stacks, large to S end, small on ridge. Two storeys, eight-window range with hipped wing projecting at N end, left two-window range was service wing with door and window set lower. Modillion timber eaves cornice. Windows were 9-pane sashes above and 12-pane below except service range ground floor left small tripartite window. Four left first floor windows survive unaltered and two ground floor windows in third and fourth bays, rest are c1993 hard-wood plate glass windows. Service door in second bay, main door in fifth, c1993 6-panel hardwood door in c1993 hardwood doorcase. Lean-to on S end. N crosswing has S 2-window range, hardwood windows above, decayed plate glass sash and horned 12-pane sash below, windowless E end. N side has hipped roof, brick panelled side-wall stack and three-window range of plate glass sashes, brick heads, one-window W end addition. Rear has added projection to left, added three-window two-storey centre, built out some 1.5m with flat roof from original rear wall which had lateral stack, but late C20 roof now extends to eaves. To right is hipped stair tower with three superimposed plate glass small sashes. Added lean-to to rear of service range to right.

Interior: South end separated into separate house c1960, and stair in stair tower removed, some shutters in room to left of main entry. Ground floor otherwise altered. Lateral fireplace in rear wall of right room. Thick c 1.25m walls apparently continuous, though original rear wall is now internal.

Included notwithstanding recent alterations as important N. Pembrokeshire gentry house of the C18, possibly on C17 core. G group value with parish Church.

The Jordanston garden

Lies in very close association with St.Cwrda's Church in an isolated location with few neighbouring farms. The garden is depicted on the Second Edition Ordnance Survey 25-inch map of Pembrokeshire IX, sheet 14 (1907). Its main elements on that map include include sundial, relict hedgelines, parterres, carriage drive, walled garden, orchard, and an old saw pit. On aerial photographs taken during the late 1990s, it appears as a possibly formal square garden, and could be pre1750 in date. C.S.Briggs, RCAHMW, 17 October 2005

Castell Hendre wen

A large circular enclosure on the summit of a Hill, a short mile to the north of the parish Church. The area of about one acre is flat, and protected by a single rampart and ditch. The bank rises on the inner side to a height of 5ft and on the outer has a fall of about 9ft to the fosse, which on the south and east has a width of 5ft; to the north and west the ditch has been much obliterated by cultivation. The entrance 15ft wide is to the west. The enclosure on which the earthwork stands is called "Castell". A short distance to the north west is a field called Parc maen Llwyd doubtless from a destroyed maenhir –visited 29th April 1920.

Keeston

Keeston Castle

What is known as Keeston Hill, rising above the little hamlet of the same name, possesses a commanding position on the gradually sloping ground from St St Bride's Bay, with a fine view towards the sea. The Hill is little more than 300ft above datum, but it is most advantageously placed in relation to the higher ground behind and on either side of it, while it commands an uninterrupted view of the whole of St Bride's Bay from Ramsey Island at the north (or St David's) point to Skomer Island at the southern (or St Brides) end of the wide crescent.

This important position is occupied by one of the largest and most interesting earthworks in the county. The plan seems to have been a double sided enclosure of three sides of the Hill, the fourth side, facing to the southwest being left without protection of a rampart or ditch. Whether the defences were never finished, or whether the eastern side was designedly left open, it is impossible to be confident about.

The inner rampart is formed of mingled stones and earth, without stone walling or outer revetment of stone at any point. It extends for nearly 300yds with an average height of 5ft. On the outer side it drops about 9 ft. to a 15ft wide ditch, fringed with a low earthen bank. Between the inner and outer banks is a flat and slightly sloping terrace of an average width of 50 ft. beyond which is another low bank. There is neither outer ditch, nor entrance other than is afforded by the open eastern approach. The inner and outer banks and intermediate ditch gradually assume the level as they draw towards the end of the curve, giving the whole work the appearance of a horse shoe. About 50 yds distant from the south face of the outer bank is a small oval enclosure 180ft by 140ft having no other defence than a low bank; it would seem to have been a cattle kraal for the camp – visited 14th May 1920.

Keeston

In the hamlet of Keeston is a small overgrown ruin, apparently of a dwelling house, which local tradition asserts to have been inhabited in the early years of the 19th century. Concerning it the Pembroke Archaeological Survey observes: - "It is suggested that here we have the remains of a house belonging to the Keatings, some of whom left Pembrokeshire with Strongbow, to found the Irish family of Keatings. Keeston was probably called Keetington, and in some charter – Latin Villa Ketinge. The Welsh name is Tregettin. The old house may have been converted into a hospice or Spital, which formally existed in this place for the reception of pilgrims on their way to St David's, and the remains are those of a building which would be admirably adapted for this purpose. There are three detached buildings. The best preserved, and by far the largest, is a very long narrow structure, 20ft wide and 150ft or thereabouts long: the greater part is lying prostrate. It is entered by a curious semicircular porch. The place is so ruinous and overgrown with brambles that we were unable to take measurements and give the description that is due" This was written circa 1900, since when the few features mentioned have practically vanished – visited 14 May 1920

Kilgetty once Coal Mining village

Kilgetty. A sprawling and somewhat untidy place which was once a coal-mining village but which has grown rapidly in recent years as a result of the Tenby-Saundersfoot holiday boom. Now a retirement and holiday village. Chiefly notable nowadays for a large super market, a well-appointed Information Centre (run jointly by the National Park Authority and the South Wales Tourism Council), AA and RAC breakdown centres, and a glassmaking workshop.

In the Kilgetty and Stepside there were a number of small pits sunk on land belonging to Lord Milford – most were closed by the late 1800's 1841 REPORT by Robert Hugh FRANKS, esq., on the Employment of Children and Young Persons in the Collieries, Iron-Works, &c, South Wales Kilgetty COLLIERY, parishes of St. Issells and Amroth, county of Pembroke, Kilgetty Coal Company, proprietors.

Persons employed:-

Males		Females
Adults	46	Adults	26
Under 18	27	Under 18	6
Under 13	13	Under 13	10

Mines descended by shaft, 45 fathoms. Three engines, power together, 56 horses. Water power, 75 horses.

Mr Samuel Singleton, underground steward.

"I have been six years steward at the Kilgetty Colliery. The employment of the young people is of a very laborious kind but the hours which they work are generally short, probably not exceeding six to eight hours. The anthracite coal is hard to work. It is never blasted. Four men contract for working the coal of the pit and they sub-let to the colliers who cut at the rate of 6 ½ d. the square yard. A good collier will cut three yards and is generally satisfied when he has accomplished that quality of work which is completed in the before time named. The young people are engaged and paid by the contractors and are only day workers. They earn 8d. to 1s. 4d.daily. The youngest boy working below is about nine years old and the age of the youngest girl 13. They work hard and regular and few holidays are taken. Girls and boys do the dramming [dragging coal carts], and women are worked at windlasses below and on the bank at wheeling and sorting coal from the culm. Accidents are not frequent but there have been three fatal within the last two years. Two boys were killed by machinery of the engine and one killed in the pit. We have no firedamp but much choke and the men, as they advance in life suffer greatly, more here then in other in Pembrokeshire. We ventilate well by air courses, furnace and air pits. The population of this part amounts to 1550, half are colliers. There is a free school at Whitland, two miles away, where most of our colliers reside, but they do not take advantage of it. I do not think the colliers about here are shorter lived than other men but they certainly are sooner disabled and frequently leave underground work at 40 to 45. Indeed, as soon as they can get other work."

Mr. Richard Hare, agent to the Kilgetty Colliery.

We employ males and females below ground to draw small waggons. The vein of our coal is not exceeding two feet in height and only 12 inches in many arts. None of the children cut the coal. The work is the good hard sort but young people alone can do it as our mainways do not exceed three feet to three feet six inches in height. The mine is well ventilated. We have 10 pits with a circulation of air one to another.

In March, 1840, two boys were killed by the machinery going adrift. This was purely accidental as we pay great attention to our gear and rarely let more than two persons descend at the same time. Children under 10 years of age are of no real use below ground and a limitation to that age would be of advantage. The weight drawn by the girls and boys in the skip [cart] never exceeds 1 1/2 cwt. And the distance they drag varies from 2 fathoms to 30. There is a small sick fund to which most of the men subscribe but we have no school nor is any money stopped for a surgeon in these works. The usual number of hours men labour is 8 to 10. Many are down longer times at times as much time is lost in cutting away the heads and ends to make room.

Ann Thomas, aged 17, pouncer.

I have been only six months at these works and usually wind up the coal below ground. Pouncing is much harder work than the windlass. It hurts my back. We only pounce when sinking a new shaft and rest frequently, indeed we could not continue long at such hard work. I have not long been away from home. I can Read, knit and sew.

[Very healthy, intelligent girl.]

[Pouncing is another name for boring, taking the means for an end. it is, however, difficult to describe the nature of this labour. It was performed by three women and two men placed opposite to each other and pressing the ends of two long acting logs acting as levers which operated a circular bore. It certainly was not proper work for females although it appeared to me less irksome than the other kinds of labour which women submit to in these parts.]

. William Absolam, 13 years old, skip haulier.

I have been hauling skips four years and work from six in the morning till eight and nine at night, never earlier than seven. I work for Ben Howard, the contractor. He pays me every other Wednesday, always in money. When goods [coals] are regular and ready my wages are 4s. a week. The girls work as long as the boys. We take Bread and butter below and sometimes cheese. The water is good so we drink it when thirsty.

I have never been hurt.

I recollect Thomas Philips breaking his arm in two places twelve months ago.

John Jones got his arm broke and William Jones cut his arm open as was a long time off work.

John Philip sadly crushed his arm below.

There are no married women in the mine. I live about a mile and a half from the works and feel weary when done as the work is very hard. I generally draw three score and ten drams daily. Our skips hold 1 1/2 cwt of goods. Where I haul, the vein is only 18 to 20 inches high and the crawling through is very difficult. Men find it very hard to work the coal here. It is as hard as a brick and they shoot away the roof and work on their bellies and sides. The workings are dry as the Masters have sunk a pit below and pump up all the water, We are frequently obliged to stop below and the men blow [blast] the roofs all day and that keeps us down frequently longer. Men go away when they please as they work by the job but we must work whether we like it or not or else we get the girdle [strap] and they give us plenty of it sometimes.

Father was a collier and works at Kings moor, just by, as the shortness of his breath prevents him from labouring in the mine. He is much better now that he gets fresh air. He earns 8s. a week but works longer than he did when on the coal. I have not been to school for five years.

[reads very well. Very intelligent but appeared dejected in spirits.]

. Ann David, aged 13, haulier of skips.

I was 10 years old when first taken to work below ground. My sister and I haul the skips for the men to where the women wind. It is a good bit away. Boys and girls work together where we work. We work from six in the morning till seven or eight at night. The time is long and the work very hard indeed, the sad, tiring sort and I feel very glad when over. I work for John Nash, a contractor. I earn 7s. in the fortnight. Sister and I pull six score of skips daily, three score each. The more we draw the more we get. Some draw three score and ten. I cannot say how many three score are but I know would not pay me unless the work is done. I have never been hurt below ground though we pull down Hill. I would like to work above ground. I was taught to read before working but now have forgotten it altogether. I can knit and sew a little. The tailor made my coat. He makes for all the women as none can do that sort of work.

[Little religious knowledge. Could not read. Very pale. Her sister, Mary, 16 years old, was very intelligent but had worked only three months below as the father, a collier, was laid aside with shortness of breath and the mother had been dead six months.]

Sarah Jones, aged 16, hauler of skips.

I have been working two and a half years. I work the same hours and in the same kind of work as the Davids. I have never been hurt. I can get no other work in this part or would prefer it.

[reads very badly.]

. William Lochlas, 12 years old, hauler of skips.

I began to haul three years ago. I find the work very hard as the crawling is very fatiguing. We work 12 and 14 hours daily and the same number of hours on Saturday. I get paid by the contractor every other Wednesday but make no stoppage away as the work is done by the score. There is no time for play below, if we play we get the girdle. There are no holidays only when there are no goods [coals] come out. I draw three score and ten skips and earn 4s. I give my wages to my father who is off work with short breath. He has no other employment above.

. William Morgan, 14 years old, hauler of skips.

I have worked for four years in the Kilgetty mines and I find the work very hard with long hours. We are kept waiting below sometimes for hours as the roofs have to be shot away. Men go when they have finished their tasks but we have to wait and do the hauling. I have not been to school except the Sunday Chapel since at work.

[Very intelligent and a good religious knowledge.]

Ann Thomas, 16 years old, windlass woman.

I have been in these mines 11 months but I did haul at the windlass before. I find the work very hard but cannot get any other. I earn 7s. and 8s. in the fortnight. Men do not like the winding, it is too hard for them. The hours depend on the goods coming away. We wind up 400 loads. Two women always work the windlass below ground.

[reads a little. Very strong and although working below, from the character of the coal, was not very dirty.]

Thomas George Noote, esq., surgeon, Begelly, Pembrokeshire.

The disease most prevalent among the colliers are a superficial affection of the knee from constant kneeling with a similar disease on the sole of the foot from the effects of wet and spasmodic asthma (not bronchitis). Not one case of humid asthma has fallen under my care. The average duration of life, from inquiries made amongst the oldest of the workmen, may be taken at about 40 years. The practice of taking children into the mines does materially tend to injure the health in consequence of the inhalation of impure air producing a constriction of the muscular fibres of the bronchi thereby causing asthma. Were it possible to be done, I would not allow a child to be taken into the pits before the age of 15 but in consequence of the depth of ore they are more frequently taken in at an earlier age. Principally speaking, the dwelling of the working class is such that there is not a free circulation of air, the windows being generally fastened. A numerous family sleep in the same bed and there is no convenience for cleanliness and from those causes when typhus prevails it continues from 12 to 20 weeks which materially adds to the misery of the poor. As there is no other coal in this neighbourhood except anthracite, I refer you to the diseases mentioned in the first.

. Lionel Brough, esq., engineer and viewer, Neath.

The state or condition of the colliers and miners of this county I incline to the opinion that they are better off than in many other mining districts in Great Britain for, although at the present period of distress their wages have been reduced, still the average wage of any 10 years of the present century would show that if the happiness of the working class depends on a high rate of remuneration for labour, the inhabitants of the Welsh coal field have been rather favoured than otherwise as their scale of wages would be found by such an examination to be higher than in Staffordshire, the North of England or Scotland. The men generally have the advantage of good cottages, supplied them at a moderate rent and often good (though small) gardens attached. In addition to this the country is well situated as regards the supply of provisions, and clothing and being open to the Bristol and west of England, the Liverpool and Irish Markets, independently of home produce which is very considerable. It thus appears that the mining population of this country has the double advantage of good wages and cheap supplies, therefore during what are termed the good times, I know of no other possessing superior means of comfort.

It certainly is of great importance that inquiry be made into the employment of children under 13 or 14 years of age. Boys, from the moment of their first employment up to the time they cease to perform the labour usually allotted to children are almost always well treated in South Wales, I therefore consider their being sent to work at an early age as rather a benefit than otherwise as they thus acquire the rudiments of their calling at a time of life that enables them at an early period to support themselves and the families often being large, it is obviously an advantage to the parents to have the lads cease to be a burden at an earlier age than is found to be the case in many other pursuits. That the children employed underground is the principality are not over worked to a tender age is evidenced by the general appearance of the adults, for, I believe a more healthy or athletic population is not to be found in any other coal county. As regards information, many of them can read and write, nevertheless I should strongly recommend that still further opportunities be afforded for acquiring education than those they now possess. Ventilation often renders necessary the aid of underground doors and these, as in the North of England, are tended by children. No doubt methods might be contrived for opening and shutting air doors by machinery but I should never recommend their adoption. On the contrary, I advise the invariable employment of boys, but not very young ones. Trappers (as they are called) should be of an age to be thoroughly aware of the immense importance to life and property attending, or rather depending, on careful attention to their duty. In the North of England this will apply with greater force than in Wales as the quantity of carburetted hydrogen gas which exudes from the coal strata is greater in Durham and Northumberland than in the county now under notice.

In many parts of Wales the coal Masters would be injured by with drawing young persons from under ground employment. I many instance one of the Pembrokeshire veins of anthracite, where the top and bottom are so excessively bad that all the timber that they can send down the pit is insufficient to keep the ways good enough for horse roads. They are, consequently, generally so low and narrow that boys only can tram the coal for the hewers to the bottom of the pit. To say that horse height could not be kept good in this vein would perhaps be a misrepresentation but it could only be effected at a cost that would deprive the owners of the mine of all profit whatever. The mode of ventilation adopted in South Wales is similar to the method used in the North of England. Acting on the principle of pillar and stall, they generally have a first and second seam working or, as it is termed in the North, the “whole coal and the broken.” It has long been an established fact that there is no other preventative to loss of life by explosion than by a thorough ventilation. That is to say, to endeavour always to force the maximum quantity of atmospheric air through the workings, so as to sweep out all the dangerous gases, mostly carburetted hydrogen which kills by explosion and combustion and carbonic acid gas which destroys animal life almost as soon as it finds access to the lungs. It would occupy more of my time than I can just now well spare, to furnish a detailed explanation of how ventilation is, or rather, ought to be, carried on. Suffice to say, that by means of windways, always sufficiently capacious, well attended air doors, strongly built air stoppings, a good furnace at or near the bottom of the upcast, the employment of sober, steady officers, capable of consulting the state of the atmosphere as indicated in the barometer, &c., the use of carefully made Davy lamps and of men who well know how to handle them, and lastly, the most unwavering attention to every department of the one. If all these means are used there will be but little loss of life in Wales either by ‘fire’ or by blackdamp, although we have plenty of both but still nothing like the quantity found in the collieries of Northumberland and Durham where all the lengths above described to secure good ventilation and many more that I have not touched upon, are all insufficient to prevent occasional accidents of the most frightful description.

Lambston,

Acc/to South Pembrokeshire Place Names – P. Valentine Harris.

Lambston. 1291, Villa Lambert. 1321 Lamberteston. ‘Lamhert’s tun.’ Probably from a Flemish personal name.

1839 Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lambston – Lewis. A parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Rhôs, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 3½ miles (W. N. W.) from Haverfordwest; contains 319 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated in the western part of the county, and at no great distance from St. St Bride's Bay, is bounded on the north by the parish of Camrhos, on the south by Steynton, on the west by Nolton, and on the east by St. Martin's, Haverfordwest. It comprises by recent measurement 1760a. 2r. 5p., the greater portion being arable. The surface is undulated, and the soil for the most part rests on a rabby substratum; the chief agricultural produce is wheat, barley, and oats: there is a very small quantity of woodland. A small rivulet intersects the parish, and falls into the western Cleddau. The former mansion of the principal landowner is now a farmhouse. There are two villages, the larger of which is called Sutton, and the smaller Portfield Gate. The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Pembroke College, Oxford; net income, £164. The tithes have been commuted for a rentcharge of £140, and there is a glebe of above thirteen acres and a half, valued at £10 per annum. The Church is a plain structure, affording accommodation to about ninety persons. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans; a Church school; and two Sunday schools, one of them in connexion with the Church, the other belonging to the Baptists.

Church --Lambston, St. Ishmael RCAM., Pembroke 1920

The Church was much restored in the last decade of the 19c. It consists of a chancel 18ft by 17 ft, nave 36ft by 18ft and a single Bell cote above the west gable. All the windows are modern save one trefoiled light on the north side of the nave; this has a height of only 32 in. and a width of 13 in. but spays out to 46 in by 36in. The chancel arch is plain pointed; above it are two projecting corbels which supported the rood beam. In the north west angle are traces of a squint to the nave 10in by 7in, now blocked. The font is of the cushion type, the basin 26in by 25in externally and 19in. by 18in internally, slopes off to a circular shaft and base; the total height is 36 in.; it has a cover. The Church was appropriated to St Thomas Haverfordwest. The burial ground is practically circular, and some 2 or 3 ft. above the level of the road that surrounds it. The site may be that of an early earthwork. - visited 20th May 1920

The nave and chancel with a plain pointed arch connecting them plus the font are of c1200. There is a fine old roof and one 15c north window. There are corbels for a former rood beam. The Church was heavily restored in the 1890's.

Lambston . — Here is the Prendergast Elizabethan Chalice which John Pember bought in the year 1715 for two pounds, seven shillings and sixpence, and presented to Lambston Church. Though not mentioned in the Memorandum printed under Prendergast, the Paten cover was apparently included in the bargain, for both pieces are now at Lambston. They each bear the single Mark ^^^ so common in Pembrokeshire. In form and decoration, the chalice is similar to the example at Amroth. It has been very ill-used, and the repairing which it has undergone would appear to be the work of a local tin-man or blacksmith. Within the lower band on the bowl is inscribed " POCVLVM » ECLESIE » DE # PRENGAST N " and immediately beneath is engraved " « THE : GIFT : OF :..... : to : Lambston : Church 1715 "• Dimensions : — height, 6in diam. of bowl, 3 in. ; diam. of base, 3in. ; weight, 7oz 13 dwts. The Paten cover is 3 in. in diameter and weighs 3oz, 3 dwts. The foot or handle has been broken off and has been replaced by a leaden bullet.

This benefice was originally a curacy, and belonged to the prior of St. Thomas , Haverfordwest, who on 12 Nov., 1324, obtained a mortmain licence from the King to appropriate the Church of St. Ishmael, in the town of Lambertys in Ros. This grant was again set on record on 10 June, 1505. - (Pat. Rolls).

This Church, described as Eccles1a de villa Lamberti, was in 1291 assessed at £4 13s 4d. for tenths to the King, the amount payable being 8s. 4d. - (Taxatio).

No detailed description of this living is given in the Valor Eccl., merely the following valuation under the heading of 'Churches appropriated to the Priory of St. Thomas , Haverfordwest':- Ecclesia de Lamston per annum IIIj'I.

On the dissolution of the priory of St. Thomas , Lambston Church came into the hands of the King from whom a lease of the rectory of Llamerston was on 2 Aug., 1538, obtained for 21 years by Henry Jones of the Household. - (State Papers).

On 10 May, 1545 A lease of the same rectory was granted by the Crown for 21 years to the same Henry Jones. - (State Papers). This was probably a renewal of the previous lease. The living of Lamston (with Haroldston west) afterwards came into the hands of the Picton Castle family, and was, with Haroldston west, given in 1749 by Sir John Philipps of Picton Castle, to Pembroke College, Oxford. The living of Lambson was united with that of Haroldston west.

Education

Schools

The Church of England Records show that there was a licenced schoolmaster in 1794. He was also listed as a curate.

Village School

The schoolroom in which this school is held is in a very bad state of repair. There was a large hole in the roof; the windows were broken; and the concrete floor all in holes.

The furniture consisted of only a desk for the master, three tables and eight benches.

The master has a large family to maintain on his receipts from the school. He holds a little farm at rack-rent; his health is impaired. He said to me “I teaches them the Church Catechism”; “the four parishes meets up there”. Most of the scholars are labourers' and a few farmers children who pay 1d for reading 2d for writing and 3d a week for arithmetic. The school was closed for the holidays and there was only one copy book to be seen, which was very ill written. The incumbent pays £5 and two others £1 each a year to support this school.

The Rev. Francis Thomas incumbent of Lanbston, informed me that the rate of labourers' wages in this parish is on average 7s or 8s a week on their own finding, farm servants £6 to £12 and female servants 50s to £5 a year. Neither of the two later classes attends Sunday School.

There are many beer houses in the parish and consequently much drunkenness. The people are also immoral to a considerable extent.

All the respectable farmers except one are able to Read and write , but there is a great deficiency of knowledge , both secular and religious among the labouring classes, and a vast number of children are being brought up in utter ignorance. January 4th 1847 WM. Morris Assistant

Walesland Rath

On a slight elevation above the left bank of Pelcombe brook is a small and somewhat oval enclosure 195ft by 145ft. There is a low bank and an outer ditch both of which have doubtless lost much of their original size and shape; but the earthwork could not at any time have been of military importance. The field in which it is placed is called Rath Park – visited 20th May 1920

East Hook Rath

On the opposite bank of the Pelcombe brook to the work just noticed is a similar but slightly smaller earthwork, having an interior diameter of about 120 ft. The two positions seem to have been connected for a much obliterated trackway appears to lead from one to the other.-visited 20th May 1920

Old road

About 300 yds west of the parish Church, and on the north side of the highway are traces of an old road which seems to have run for 150 yds in a northerly direction and to end suddenly in a field; its course is easily followed. The Tithe Schedule has it marked “an old road” - visited 20th May 1920.

The second field north east of Sutton Hill is known by this name. It probably formed part of the original glebe – visited 20th May 1920

-- Velfrey, in the name Llanbedr Velfrey and in the adjoining parish, Llanddewi Velfrey, represents an earlier Evelfre, which was the name borne by a small autonomous principedom that seems to have been ruled by an Independent line of chiefs at a very remote period. It comprised the area of the present parishes of Llanbedr (usually written and pronounced Lampeter) velfrey, Llanddewi Velfrey, Crinow, and perhaps parts of Ludchurch and Cronware

The name means "the Church of St Peter in Efelre" a district in the Welsh hundred of Cantref Gwarthaf and, later, in the lordship of Narberth. The parish Church is dedicated either to Pedyr, a Welsh saint or to the apostle Peter. It was restored in 1862 and has a number of memorials, including a Jacobean altar tomb in the Lady Chapel.

At one time it was said that the Ark came to rest at Blaengwaith Noah but the name is a corruption of Blaen Gwyddno "the source of the Gwyddno". There is a promontory fort overlooking the Gwyddno valley and a Hill fort nearby at Castell Meherin.

Lampeter-Velvrey (LLAN-BEDR-FELFRE), a parish, in the union and hundred of Narberth, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 3 miles (E.) from Narberth; contains 1025 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated in the rich and fertile Valle of Lampeter, and on the south side of the river Marlais, extends for nearly six miles from east to west, and about three miles from north to south. The surrounding scenery is pleasingly varied; and the place, which is of considerable antiquity, contains several objects of historical interest. Limestone is found in abundance, and is quarried for building purposes, and also burnt into lime as manure for the supply of the neighbouring country. The living is a rectory, rated in the King's Books at £10, and in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £470; the glebe comprises 33a. 2r. 28p., valued at £30 per annum, and there is a glebe-house. The Church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a very ancient structure, consisting of two aisles separated by plain pointed arches; in the north aisle is an altar- tomb to a member of the Philipps family, of Lampeter House. There are places of worship for Baptists and Independents, with a Sunday school held in each of them; also a very handsome building erected as a day school through the exertions of the Rev. William Seaton, the rector, in 1845. John Jones, M.D., in 1698, bequeathed certain lands and tenements for the relief of poor families, and for apprenticing children of the parishes of Lawrenny, Cosheston, St Davids, and Lampeter-Velvrey, now producing a considerable sum annually, which is distributed in proportion to the number of deserving objects in the different parishes; the ratio for this place being two-sevenths, and the sum for distribution among the poor generally, £30, which is partly divided between decayed farmers and poor widows not receiving parochial relief, in sums of from £4 to £10, and partly applied to apprenticing children, the usual premium being £4.

A posting-inn at the entrance of the county from Carmarthen, distinguished by the name Tavern Spite, occupies the site of the ancient "Tavarn y Spyty," an hospitium that belonged to Whitland Abbey, upon the bank of the river Tâf; and Blaengwyddno, now a farmhouse, was the Grange of that religious establishment. To the south-west of the latter place are some very extensive earthworks, called Castell Meherin, on the summit of a high ridge commanding a full view of the sea, and forming one of a chain of forts continued in a north-western direction along this part of the coast; and in a field adjoining the turnpike-road, a little to the north-east, are two semicircular embankments, commanding the passage of three several valleys .

This Church was restored in the year 1867. It consists of two parallel chambers 61ft by 18 ½ ft, a north tomb recess, a south porch and a single Bell-cot above the west gable of the north aisle. There is no constructive division between nave and chancel. The nave and aisle are connected by five Early English arches springing from circular masonry piers; the easternmost and westernmost arches are not so wide as the three middle ones. The north chamber, now occupied by an Organ, is separated from the aisle by a plain pointed arch. The windows, south porch, and Bell-cote are modern. At the east end of the south wall is a 17th century altar -tomb of the family of Phillips of Lampeter. The font is of the usual square type 23ins by 22 ins with a circular basin 19in in diameter and traces of a cover. It slopes off to a square pillar. In the churchyard is the base of a cross, with modern shaft and head; also a portion of a crosshead, 23in by 19 in., having the upper vertical arm broken off, probably part of the original churchyard cross.---visited 21st May 1918.

1847 Report of the Commission on Education in Wales (The Blue Book) Lampeter Velfry

Parish of Lampeter Velfrey – Mr David Morgan of Venter Inn Farm informed me that labourers wages in this parish a 10d a day with food and 1s to 1s 2d without; carpenters and masons, with food 1s 6d without 2s; farm servants this year get from £4 to £12., female servants from £1 to £4 a year. There is gratuitous education for the poor in this parish, yet there are many, owing to the poverty or negligence of the parents, without daily instruction. The Church Catechisms learnt and the children are expected to go to Church on Sundays. The people are steady and temperate in general. Respectable farmers are well educated for country purposes, but many small farmers are quite illiterate. There is a growing desire among all classes now for education.

December 8th 1846 Wm Morris Assistant.

School at Tavernspite

in this parish is held in a very handsome Gothic building, erected at the expense of the present Rector, with the aid of a grant from the Committee of Council. The schoolhouse, from its commanding position and dimensions, is quite a landmark for the country round. It is built in a locality where schools are much wanted; the adjacent parishes of Llangan, Cyffic and Cronware having no day-school in them. At the time when I purposed visiting Tavernspite, there was so deep a snow that no children could come to school, and, at the only other period when I could have, the Christmas holidays would not be over for three weeks.

Parkseison School

- This school is kept in the room of a dwelling house situated on the road from Narberth to Tavernspite. The floor was quite out of repair, as were the window and partition. The furniture in the room consisted of three benches, a few old stools, a table, and a variety of articles for domestic use. There was a good fire in the grate. The mistress is 84 years of age, but appeared a hale person; she "sais" that she never yet applied for parochial relief. George Allen esq., of Kilrhew, pays her 26s a year for the tuition of three poor children, and had promised, she said, to give her a house and garden rent free next year. She could read tolerably well. The scholars are labourers' children and they read better than I expected considering the advanced age of the teacher, but they could tell nothing of what they had read.

December 8th 1846 Wm Morris Assistant

Redford Dame School

– The house in which this school is held is in good repair, as is also the room occupied by the scholar. It contained two tables, a chest of drawers, three benches, and a great many things for domestic use. Everything was very clean and neat. The mistress had newly commenced school keeping. She also sold tobacco and appeared to live well.

The scholars are labourers' children; hardly any could read in the Testament. Questions on the lesson were quite strange to them, nor had they any idea of finding out answers from the portion read in the 19th chapter of St John. Copy books were ill written.

Lampeter Velfrey clothier Verdict Guilty Punishment Death Before the Pembrokeshire Courts 1730-1830-----

There seems to be some confusion in various records regarding this boy but what is evident is that the Jury and Judge took a very strong view of this case There was no recommendation to mercy or reduction in sentence to transportation as happened in many other recorded cases of the time It was a public hanging and that his body was hanged in chains after would also suggest that the case raised a lot of feeling as again this was unusual In fact he was the last juvenile to be hung in chains-----The Court records state that David Dackfield from the parish of Narberth in the county of Pembroke by trade a Cordwainer that is a high class shoe maker murdered Anne Morgans daughter of John Morgan a clothier who lived at Lampeter Velfrey on the 1st February 1801 by hitting her on the head with as stone Anne Morgans was eleven years old and David Dackfield was in the court records age 17 The murder took place at LampeterVelfrey -----David Dackfield pleaded not guilty at his trial but was found guilty and hanged at the Bowling Green Haverfordwest in Pembrokeshire on the 6th of April 1801 Afterwards his body was hanged in chains at Tavernspite cross roads. His execution and Gibbeting cost Pembrokeshire £20 -7s - 4d

Extract from The History of Haverfordwest John Brown

"In 1801 a lad not more than fifteen of the name of David Duckfield was hanged for the murder of a little girl Of those who witnessed the execution I conversed with one lady who is still living who was brought by her Father as if he though it might prove a useful deterrent lesson for a little maid under ten She was horrified with the shrieks of the boy entreating the bystanders to save him while the hangman was endeavouring to soothe him while putting the rope round his neck addressing him as "My poor boy come now! 'tunc now that's a good boy "

Sites of Archeological Interest

Crug Y Swllt RCAM

This is a burial mound situated about 500 yds south west of Tafarn Spite, and within a few yards of the county boundary. It was examined by Fenton, whose account is as follows:-

'A large tumulus , an excrescence but rarely seen in this vicinity, which I alighted to explore . Having mustered what labourers I could, a proportional opening was made in the centre ... By way of encouragement I laid hold of a pickaxe, and at the first blow striking near the outer edge of the section, I was so unfortunate as to fall on the urn and break it in two, a thing most unexpected and quite contrary to what is usual; it lay within a few inches of the outer sward and with its mouth up. It was not of a large size, very rude, totally unornamented, and of rather an uncommon form, being Bell shaped. It contained some fragments of ill-calcined bonesAfter going down for about 5 feet, we came to an immense bed of charcoal, that ended in a large irregular cist branching out in various directions, full of ashes and burned bones, as if it had been a family mausoleum.... I was under the necessity of abandoning the pursuit, satisfied that we had not come in contact with the primary internment. The tumulus is called by the country people Crug y swllt, literally the "heap of the shilling"; but I presume 'swllt' may be a corruption of Essylly or some such word (Tour 475)' The mound is now grass grown, and still exhibits marks of the disturbance by Fenton. It has a base circumference of 270 feet is 5ft high and somewhat bowl shaped in form. It is locally stated that not very Long ago, what is described as "an old sword" was found in it; enquiries as to the present whereabouts of this object has led to no result. The mound was used in the early 18th century as the site of a gibbet.

In an adjacent field to Crug y swllt, called Parc y Garreh Lwyd, stood a maernhir until a few years ago, when it was broken up: some of the 'debris' is scattered around . This may probably be identified with the site of which Fenton, continuing his account of Crug y swllt says :-

A little to the south east of the tumulus, in the centre of an oval enclosure formed by a faint earthen agger, similar to those surrounding what on the Wiltshire downs is termed a Druid's barrow. Lay a large stone flat on the ground, about 18 feet Long, four feet broad and about 2 feet in average thickness in a place quite destitute of stones, towards which led a pitched avenue like an old Roman road , still to be traced as far as the turnpike the whole length of the field , notwithstanding the cultivation the field seems to have undergone for ages. Of the pitched avenue no trace remains above ground – visited 20th May 1915.

Newhouse Tumulus RCAM

This is the more easterly of two mounds, the second 50 yds to the south west being in the Parish of Ludchurch. In circumference it measures about 300 ft and in height 4 feet. It is bowl shaped like its companion, but has been reduced by ploughing – visited 20th May 1915

Llan Cromlechs

On a field known as Parc Y Garreg, about 100yds due south of a schoolhouse, and 500yds east of Llan mill, are the remains of at least three cromlechs. A writer in Pem Arch Survey states that he remembered this place some thirty years previously when there were 'several complete cromlechs' What is now visible are the remains of a group of certainly three structures. That to the north consists of four stones, one 6ft in length, prostrate, and recently broken at one end; a second stone, about 2ft above the ground, and two stones of similar height in close proximity to each other. About 180 ft to the south west are portions of another cromlech comprising one erect stone 3ft high 5ft in length and one foot thick; one other erect stone 3 ft above ground and 18inches thick; and by their side, a prostrate boulder, probable a capstone 9 ½ feet by 3 ½ ft broad. Distant 25 ft from the last cromlech is a third consisting of four stones all prostrate, and partially buried in the soil.—visited 21 st May 1923

Blaen Gwyddno Camp RCAM

A well preserved promontory camp, situated on a tongue of land at the junction of two valleys. The camp is defended on the east and west by steep banks which fall to the streams that flow on either side of the earthwork and unite at the foot of the promontary. The defence on the south consists of a double line of ramparts and ditches. Each bank has a length of about 180 feet. The inner rampart rises some 5ft from the level of the enclosed area and falls 7 ft to a ditch 5ft deep and 10ft broad. The outer bank rises to 10ft and drops some 12ft to a ditch now partially filled in. The enclosed area has a length from north to south of 150 ft and from east to west of 130ft. The slopes, which are clothed with dense wood have been scarped at the point. The ramparts have been disturbed but the entrance can be made out at the west end. The interior of the camp has a slight slope to the north. The field to the west is known as Park Castle – visited 28th April 1915.

Old Castle RCAM

This mound Castle is situated about 180yds north of the parish Church; it shows no sign of a Bailey. The mound rises to a height of 12 ft. The summit is 120 ft in diameter, and has a depression in the centre. The surrounding ditch is now considerably filled in; it is seen at its best on the west where the counter-scarp has a height of 6ft. The whole structure is densely covered with vegetation. Lieut-Colonel W Ll Morgan., an ex Commissioner, suggests that this motte has probably been cut down, and the squat appearance, as well as the unusual summit-breath, makes the suggestion probable. The farm is locally called Castell Cynen or Cynon – visited 21st May 1915

Rhos Marn, Parc Maen RCAM

Two fields on the farm of Gors where a maenhir may once have stood.

Parc y maen Llwyd RCAM

A field on the farm of Allt y baily which may have been part of the demesne of Whitland Abbey; it doubtless at one time contained a maen Llwyd.

Parc y garn RCAM

There is now no trace of a cairn on this field which is part of the farm of Llantydwell – visited 21st May 1915

Trefgarn RCAM

This is an ancient name mentioned in the donation charter of Blaen gwyddno to Whitland Abbey. There was probably a notable cairn in this neighbourhood which gave its name to the tref within which it stood – visited 21st May 1915

Parc y sarn RCAM

A field exhibiting no present appearance of a causeway

Pen gawsai RCAM

A small holding on the road to Whitland, in all probability on the route adopted by the chronicler of the romance of Pwyll prince of Dyved for the journey of Pwyll from Narberth to Glyn Cuch.

Carreg lwyd RCAM

Two fields on the farm of Cil rhew [?Cil rhiw] where are no indications of a standing stone

King's Park RCAM

A field on Gilfach farm. Doubtless a portion of the crown lands in this parish.

Church Park RCAM

Once part of the parochial glebe. There is a tradition that it was intended to place the Church in this field but the design was always frustrated by super-natural agency.

Parc yr eglwys RCAM

The name cannot be explained

Tafarn Spite RCAM

This is the name of a hamlet close on the county boundary, where probably a place of public entertainment for man and beast has stood from early medieval times – visited 20th May

Lamphey

Very old village with a free standing "Flemish" Chimney

Seems to have belonged to the Diocese of St David's by 1096 for that year the Bishop was there during the seige of Pembroke Castle.

Bishops palace once residence of Bishops of St David's earliest surviving document dated from the Palace at Lamphey was issued in 1259, during the episcopate of Richard de Carew but Welsh

Bishops of St David's had ready chosen Lamphey as a rural retreat before the Normans came.

After the reformation and Bishop Barlow who neglected all the See's Pembrokeshire property as he wished to remove the See to Carmarthen, the manor was given up to the Crown, who in 1546 passed into the Devereux family and Robert Earl of Essex, favourite of Queen Elizabeth spent his boyhood here.

Nearby, the imposing Lamphey Court outwardly well preserved house in the Classical revival style of the 1820's

The Church in the village has a Norman tower, but was largely rebuilt in the nineteenth century.

In Norman times a Demesene consisted of several strips widely scattered in several fields of varying size the manor of Lamphey had 6 fields some of which were more than 100 acres in area

Bishop's Palace RCAM

It is probable that a residence of the bishops of St Davids existed at Lamphey from a very early period.

The structure as it at present consists of two parts, an eastern and a western wing, connected by a gateway that stands about midway between them. The western wing is the earlier, and may date from the time of Richard de Carew during whose episcopate the earliest surviving document that emanated from the palace of Lamphey was issued in the year 1259. A considerable length of outer walling is unbroken by a window fronting the exterior, whilst the top of the wall is battlemented and loopholed. Against this wall, and looking across the courtyard, was the Hall measuring about 80 feet by 20 feet; above there seems to have been a series of dormitories. The other living rooms were doubtless arranged round the courtyard, but all traces of them have vanished above ground.

Whatever kind of eastern wing may then have existed, it was completely removed about 1330, and a building was erected on this portion of the site probably by Bishop Henry Gower soon after his appointment to the see. The frontage of the mansion was thus considerably extended, both wings being connected with an archway, the lower parts of which show it to have been constructed prior to Bishop Gower's time, and to have been merely altered and beautified by him. The outer wall of this wing is surmounted by a strikingly effective parapet of arched openings similar to what is known to be Gower's work in the ruined Bishop's palace at St Davids, and in the upper walls of the episcopal Castle of Swansea. Professor Freeman considered the work at Lamphey to be "a mere bungling imitation of his Gower's work at St David's from a later hand, but it is more likely to represent Gower's first attempt.

A number of chambers are named in the survey of Lamphey taken after the dissolution of the Monasteries, but these with their undercrofts have so far disappeared as to leave no sufficient indications of their respective purposes. There must, of course, always have been a Chapel within the precincts of the palace; at any rate the ruins of one stands within the quadrangle parallel with Gower's wing; it may be of his erection, and was probably structurally connected with the residence. The exterior walls of this Chapel still remain; the eastern gable holds a beautifully-proportioned Perpendicular window. The Chapel was dedicated to St. Mary visited 14th April 1915

The palace of the Bishops of St David's from the C 13 and probably much earlier and until the mid C16. It has important surviving works which have been associated with Bishops Richard Carew Henry de Gower and Edward Vaughan.

The palace was surrendered to the Crown by Bishop William Barlow in 1546, whence it was granted to Richard Devereux (and the line of the Earls of Essex).

In 1683, probably after damage in the Civil War, the palace was sold to the Owens of Orielton, and in 1821 to Charles Mathias. In the time of Owen's tenure the buildings were neglected or converted to farm use, but preservation commenced under the Mathias family followed by H. M. Office of Works and Cadw.

Early C13: Fragments remain of the Old Hall and its undercroft. It is not clear with which Bishop this first surviving work is associated. In the Hall two lancets at north, one blocked. Hearth at South with a round chimney above. In the undercroft: slit windows with wide embrasures. Local limestone rubble. Alterations in C16.

Late C13 (associated with Bishop Carew): the western Hall (replacing the old Hall which became a kitchen) and its undercroft. The Hall has a fireplace at the centre of the North wall. An attached latrine block at the SE corner. Undercroft: windows with stepped high sills above what appear to be seats. In the walls are the sockets of the floor joists carrying the original timber floor laid above a Longitudinal bridging joist. Local limestone with dressings in a coarse freestone.

In later centuries the western Hall continued as the main Hall of the Palace. The undercroft was vaulted over. Windows converted to Tudor form. An attic storey and a new latrine block at S were added.

Early C14 (associated with Bishop Gower): A Long narrow Hall (or suite of rooms?) and undercroft added at the E of the Palace. The main stairs are against the N wall, above the undercroft porch. There are corbels for a pentice roof sheltering the stairs. The Hall was roofed with six trusses, for the wall-posts of which there are corbels about 1.5 m above floor level. Pairs of trefoil-headed lancet windows with window seats. The E end of the Hall is served by a fireplace with a conical chimney. A latrine wing is attached at SW. At the top of the walls is an arcaded parapet, of less developed type than that of Bishop Gower at St David's. Local limestone rubble with sandstone dressings. This building has a fine undercroft which now appears as a single vault, slightly pointed at the apex. The springings of several of the eleven cross-ribs survive, but the ribs have almost completely disappeared and the straight construction joints in the stonework above rib positions are visible.

A building at the E of the inner ward containing additional accommodation (the 'red chamber') may be contemporary.

Early C16 (associated with Bishop Vaughan) Fragments of a Chapel with a modern gateway at the E. Sacristy at N. Fragments of Tudor windows. A fine Perpendicular E window survives.

Wards: The inner ward gatehouse, now standing in isolation two storeys, with gatekeeper's room above. Altered stairs at N. incorporating a mounting block. Pitched floor in the gateway. shallow vaulted floor above. In the NE corner of the upper room there is a fireplace. Parapet arcading after the Gower style.

There remain fragments of an extensive outer ward, to the N and W of the main buildings. Here the most important structure was Bishop Vaughan's great corn barn, the lower part of the N wall of which survives. Also fragments of the outer gatehouse. A later outer precinct wall to the S facing the stream and fishponds.

A detailed inventory of the goods of Bishop Rawlings lists the following rooms of the late Bishop 'at his manor place of Lantefey', with their contents, providing an idea of the extent of the building at the Dissolution as follows-

The Bishop's own chamber 'where he was accustomed to take his rest and where he died'.

Lamphey St Tyfei – Parish of Lamphey RCAM

Even before 1851 this Church had been " fearfully modernized (Arch Camb., II, ii, 821), and it was further restored " in 1870. It has now little of antiquarian interest except its west tower and its font. On plan the building is cruciform -the chancel being 19 feet by 22 feet, nave 86 feet by 22 feet, north transept 17 feet by 16 feet, south transept 9 feet by 8 feet. The modern reconstruction followed the original lines.

The windows have been renewed, but two lancets on either side of the chancel preserve portions of the work described by Freeman as " two remarkable trefoil lancets . . . with deep Early English jamb mouldings " (Arch. Camb., 1852, II, iii. Ili4).

In the south wall of the chancel is a piscina with a pointed arch. A squint-passage connects the chancel with the north transept. When Sir Stephen Glynne visited the Church in 1845 the south transept was " a small Chapel, made into a pew, opening by a very rude and low obtuse arch." The font basin is square, 26 inches outside, 20 inches inside measurement; it is of the regular Norman type; its sides are ornamented with a band of six-pointed stars. It stands on a circular shaft, with cable mouldings around the top of the pillar, and is one of the best preserved fonts in the county.

The tower is of three storeys, the lowest having a plain vault; it is unbuttressed, slightly-tapered, and finished with a corbel table and battlements. The stair turret is at the north-east angle. The belfry lights are double; the rest single slits. It opens to the nave by a plain pointed arch. The exterior doorway in the west wall and the window above are modern insertions.—visited, 18th May, 1922. (Arch. Camb., 1886, V, iii, 5fi)

The parish of Lamphey was also a manor of the Bishopric of St David's.

The Church has repositioned fragments of C13 architectural detail in the chancel - a piscina and two lancet windows, and there is early masonry surviving at the bases of walls, particularly the N transept. At the W end is a C14 / C15 tower. In the C19 the Church underwent extensive restoration to the point of rebuilding, to counteract the effects of earlier extensive improvements. Its plan, however, is unchanged.

In 1811 the use of the little south Chapel or transept as the private pew of Portclew House, with its own fireplace, is mentioned, and it was still a pew in 1845. Also mentioned in 1845 was the fact that all the nave windows had been converted to sashes, a modern ceiling inserted, and the North door blocked. These latter improvements may date from 1826, when the Church was thoroughly repaired and re-pewed to achieve 200 additional sittings. In 1845 four Early English trefoil-headed lancet windows still survived in the chancel, but in 1852 only two were noted. The Church was thoroughly restored in 1869-71 by Ewan Christian, architect of London.

The churchyard cross was removed c.1830 to a neighbouring farm.

Exterior: Nave and chancel under one uninterrupted roof, with porch and small transept at South and a larger transept at North. Local masonry in irregular courses. Roofs of large slates with crested tile ridges and stone gable-parapets. Cross finial at East. All rainwater heads carry the date 1870. Signs of a blocked doorway are visible at low level in the North wall of the nave.

There is a tall tower of three storeys at W. slightly battered with crenellated parapet on corbels. At its NE corner is a stairs turret, projecting on the N side only. The tower masonry is randomly coursed with large stones at the quoins. Double belfry lights to East and west, single belfry lights to North and South.

Interior

The chancel is 5.5 m long by 6.5 m wide, with two lancets (re-set in the C19 masonry). The nave is 11 m by the same width, with transepts overlapping the chancel: the North transept opens to the nave by an unusual arch which is an incomplete segment, and also connects with the chancel by a small squint. The South transept or Chapel is now the vestry. The tower, at the west end, is vaulted. Memorials include a Gothick one to Charles Mathias (d. 1831).

The churchyard wall is built up to the corners of adjacent buildings (school and bakery). Rubble stonework with a coping of spaced upright stones in mortar. At the NW corner there is a modern lychgate in memory of Anthony Mathias: two stone piers with a simple moulding and an oak roof, on which are slates taken from Lamphey Court.

Notes on the Older Churches – Lamphey Church 1845 Glynne

This Church consists of a wide nave without aisles, north transept, and a chancel, with a west tower. The tower is of a kind very common in the south-western part of Pembrokeshire, but not elsewhere. The character is more that of military or castellated architecture. This particular instance is lofty, and tapering towards the top, without buttresses or stringcourses dividing the different stories. There is an embattled parapet, and below it is a corbel table. The belfry windows on the east and west are double, with obtuse heads; the others single. At the northeast angle is a square turret with stairs; the west doorway plain and pointed; over it a window modernised. The lower part of the tower has a very curious plain stone vault within, forming a rudely staped arch. The style of this and similar towers is apparently Early English, though this may not be a matter of certainty. The north door is closed, and the south porch made into a vestry. The windows of the nave are all modernised, with sashes; the ceiling also modern. There is a small Chapel on the south (now made into a pew) opening by a very rude and low obtuse arch. In the south wall is some trace of the rood door. The north transept opens to the nave by a singular, imperfect arch (about three parts of a segmental arch) abutting against the east wall; and from the transept into the chancel is a pointed and clumsily shaped hagioscope. The chancel arch is plain and obtuse without mouldings. There are some good Early English lancet windows in the chancel; on the north three, with good mouldings; on the south, one; all have external as well as internal mouldings. On the south of the altar is a piscina with mouldings and a drip stone. The font has a circular bowl with curious ornamental panelling round the top, and scalloped below; the stem circular, with a cable moulding round it, and square base. The pulpit is within the chancel arch obstructing the altar. At the west end is a finger Organ in a gallery.

Pembrokeshire Parsons

Very little is known of the early history of this Church. It was apparently appendant to the Manor of Lamphey, which was owned by the Bishop of St Davids, as in the grant of the manor of Lamphey made by Bishop William Barlow to King Henry VIII. the patronage of the Church of Lamphey is expressly reserved to the Bishop and his successors.—Fenton's Pem.

Under the heading 'Livings Discharged':—Lamfey alias Llamphey alias llantiffi (St. Faith). Syn. and Prox., 2s. Val. per Ann. in decim., cas., oblat. &c. Bishop of St Davids Patr. and Imps. Clear yearly value £5. King's Books, £5 8s. 11d.—Bacon's Liber Regis.

The only lease of this parsonage mentioned among the cathedral records was on 20 June, 1638, when with its glebe together with the parsonage of Waren, it was demised for 21 years by the Bishop to Thomas Mayland gent at the annual rent of £26 13s 4d

Cross

Built into the wall of a garden immediately opposite the churchyard gate is a slab of limestone on which is carved a cross- with rounded projections midway on either side of the cross arms 20 m

North of the Iychgate of Lamphey Church. A mediaeval grave slab set upright into the garden wall of the Old School House. Possibly the slab was taken up when extensive improvements were carried out to the Church in 1826 and removed here when the schoolmaster's house and its garden were formed shortly afterwards. It was in its present position when reported in the Inventory in 1925. The slab consists of a single slab of limestone at least 1.8 m Long (high), by 15 cm thick, and tapering from about 45 to 40 cm in width. On its front (now facing the road) is an incised cross in very shallow double lines, extending to all edges of the stone. Midway in each arm is a rounded shape. The sides and rear of the stone, so far as visible, are rough-hewn. No inscription has been seen.

Churchyard Cross.

According to the Pembroke. Arch Survey the shaft of the churchyard cross (destroyed about 1830), which formerly stood on the north side of the Church, on a site in the school-house garden marked by an oak tree, was removed to North Hill Farm, Lamphey, and made part of a cattle-rubbing stone.

Baker's Cottage A house probably of the C 18, believed to have been a small staging inn called 'The Venison'. At some time since acquisition by Charles Mathias in 1821 as part of Lamphey Estate, it became a bakery. In 1838 it was in the ownership of Abraham Leach and the tenant was George Macken. The cottage is also believed to have been occupied at one time (c.1875) by a governess. In c.1890 Joseph Bond installed a Tonks baking oven, the front panel of which is now preserved affixed to a wall at the rear of the house. This was worked in addition to a traditional brick Bread oven. The front of a later Princie oven is also displayed. In c.1925 R E G White converted a little stable adjacent to the house at the South to serve as a new bakery

Court House At the N of Lamphey village, at the turning to the lane which leads to Lamphey Court. Reputed to date from c.1695. The name derives from the use of the house as a court, the left (parlour) unit having been the courtroom. Subsequently the house has been a farmhouse.

Lamphey Court. A residence just north of the Palace.

The area belonged to the Devereux family, but on the attainder of the Earl of Essex late in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, the lands were purchased by Sir Hugh Owen of Orielton and remained in possession of his descendants until about 1821 when they were sold to Charles Mathias of Llangwarran, who, in 1823 commenced to build the residence known as Lamphey Court. There had been an older house on the site, and according to the Pembrokeshire Arch Survey, had an outside staircase leading to the upper floor, which was pulled down in 1826. The new Lamphey Court was a large handsome mansion with a fine portico of four Ionic columns. Four of the Mathiases were High Sheriffs - Lewis in 1856, Charles in 1890, Charles Ronald in 1937 and Lewis in 1965. Lewis Mathias was the last of the family at the mansion which he sold in 1978, and now lives in a house in the grounds. The mansion is now a hotel.

Mathias of Lamphey Court

The Mathias family had resided in LlangWarren, Jordanston, Pembrokeshire, since the 16th century, when

Mathias Thomas c 1570-1617 of Glastir, Nevern, Pembrokeshire, married Lloyd Jane, co-heiress of LlangWarren The estate descended in the male line, passing to

Mathias Charles Delamotte 1777-1851, who married Bethell, Mary of Somerset Charles ---Mathias Charles of LlangWarren 1817 High Sheriff of Pembrokeshire Charles Mathias purchased Lamphey Court, Lamphey, Pembrokeshire, in 1810-1811, and built a new mansion there in 1823 Their children were

Mathias Lewis 1813-1882 of Lamphey Court JP High Sheriff 1856 Guardian of the Poor - son of Charles Mathias - of Rochamstead who married Lawes Emily Catherine d 1877 daughter of J B Lawes of Harpenden, Hertfordshire and they had children

Lamphey Park A residence just north of Lamphey Court.

In 1786 James Thomas was owner-occupier of Lamphey Park, and was still there in 1817 when he was described as gentleman. In 1834 Charles Poyer Callen was the tenant, paying a yearly rent of £50, and Lewis in 1840 states that Lamphey Park, 'the property of Mrs. Thomas occupies a pleasant situation it is now derelict.

North Down

In 1840 this was described as a 'genteel residence' occupied by the Rev. B. Byers.

Precious notes are sketchy, but gives a rough pedigree of the Rowe family Henry Rowe of Lamphey, who died in 1705 had a son Lewis described as 'of Northdown. Lewis 's eldest son John inherited His second son (b.1699) was the Rev. Henry Rowe Vicar of St. Petrox. John's son Richard inherited North Down and was Mayor of Pembroke in 1766,1775,1781 and 1786.

Trewent Hall

1477 4th February

Robertus etc. Bishop, Lord of Pebidiawke and LLawhaden, Hugh ap Owen chanter of the cathedral Church of St Davids, and the chapter of the same place, to all to whom etc. greeting. Know ye that we of our unanimous assent and consent have given and by this our present writing confirmed to our beloved in Christ Henry Matteston the office of Parker or keeper of the park of Lamphey and have made, ordained, and appointed, the said Henry Parker or keeper of the same park during his life, to have, occupy and exercise the said office by himself or his sufficient deputy during his life as other parkers and keepers have been accustomed to do in the aforesaid office, taking thereto yearly from us and our successors bishops of the bishopric of St. David's for doing and exercising the aforesaid office 72s. of lawful money of England by the hands of the reeve of Lamphey for the time being, together with all the fees, commodities, and rewards, belonging or pertaining to the same office, at two terms of the year, namely at the feasts of Easter and St. Michael the Archangel, by equal portions. And if it happen that the aforesaid 72s. be in arrear unpaid, in part or in the whole, at any feast named above, that then it shall well be lawful for the aforesaid Henry to distrain in all the messuages, lands, and tenements which save have in the lordship of Lamphey and carry away the distrains so taken and retain them until the aforesaid Henry during his life be satisfied in full of the aforesaid 72s. together with all arrears thereof. In witness whereof etc. Dated in our Chapter House, 4 February, 1476-77, 16 Edward IV.

1486 30 July

On 30 July 1486 at Lamphey a letter, the tenour of which follows, was exhibited to H. Bishop of St Davids. To the venerable father in Christ etc. the Bishop St David's or his vicar general in spiritualities

Julian by the mercy of the Lord Bishop of Ostia sendeth greeting and sincere charity in the Lord. A petition offered unto us on behalf of Walter ap John of Stacorse layman of your diocese contained that by the instigation of the devil he lately killed one Roger Walter, priest of the said place, his Spiritual father who had baptized one of his sons, on which account he falls under the sentence of excommunication pronounced in general terms against such as do these things, upon which things he has caused supplication to be humbly made, setting forth the same, for a due remedy to be mercifully provided for him by the apostolic see. We therefore by authority of the Lord Pope the care of whose penitentiary we bear and by his special mandate upon this made to us by the oracle of the living voice commit to your prudence that if this is so when he shall have gone by all the larger churches of that place where so great a crime was perpetrated, naked and unshod with only his breeches on, bearing a rod in his hand, and a yoke about his neck if he can with safety and caused himself to be beaten before the doors of the churches aforesaid and with the priests of the same singing a penitential psalm, when the multitude of the people in these is greatest, publicly confessing his sin, and when he shall have adequately satisfied, if he have not already done so, the Church which the murdered priest served, and when he and his heirs have been deprived for ever of any fee or right of patronage he hold of the Church (and lest the memory of the punishment be too short let his children on this account be deemed incapable of holding an ecclesiastical benefice unless with them there be a merciful dispensation upon this by the apostolic see), you shall absolve this layman from the said sentence and such guilt and excess of priesticide in the accustomed form of the Church and enjoin on him therefore by the authority aforesaid, such penance as may be to him for salvation and to others for terror.

Dated at Rome at St. Peter under the seal of the office of the penitentiary 21 April, 4 Innocent VIII.

. . Hugh etc. to Masters David Wogan Canon of our cathedral Church of St Davids, and Richard Gely Canon of our College of Abergwilly, greeting etc.

To have cognizance, to proceed, to decree, and to decide finally, in a matrimonial cause which one David Tailour of the parish of St. Mary , Pembroke, of our diocese intends to move before us against Joneta Raymond of the said parish and to determine the cause itself by a due and canonical end, with the things arising out of, depending on, incidental to and connected with it, to you in whose prudence and industry we have full confidence in the Lord, jointly and severally, we commit our functions with the power of every canonical coercion whatsoever, commanding that of the whole process to be had before you in this behalf, when the cause is determined, you, or one of you, certify us distinctly and openly by letters patent sealed with an authentic seal. Dated in Lamphey manor 13 September, 1487 etc.

1488 8 May

To all and singular etc. Hugh etc

Whereas we etc. to whom sole and entire the right of conferring the grammar schools in our city and diocese of St Davids as well of right as of custom is well known to pertain, have appointed our beloved in Christ Richard Smyth master in arts, chaplain in our Church of the blessed Mary , Haverford, of our diocese, to be master of the grammar schools in the said Haverford and to rule the same grammar schools, and to inform unlearned youths in grammar and the other liberal sciences, by the tenour of these presents, therefore, we inhibit and admonish, once, twice, and thrice, that no one put under or subject to us by diocesan right dare contrary to this our appointment to rule such schools in the said town of Haverford and any place within a circumference of seven miles of the same town without obtaining the licence of the aforesaid master, or in any wise whatsoever presume to attempt anything about the premises to the prejudice of the aforesaid Master Richard, under pain of contempt and the greater excommunication to be pronounced against contemnners and violators of our present appointment. In witness whereof etc. Dated in our manor of Lamphey 8 May in the year etc.

1489 5 January

On 5 January in the year above, at Lamphey by the Rev. father aforesaid , Sir John Dier chaplain , was admitted to the vacant Church of Manorbier, on the presentation of the vernerable man master Owen Pole , doctor of degrees, rector of the said Church and patron of the said vicarage and canonically instituted in the same according to the form of the legatine constitutions published in this behalf and he had letters etc.

1489 19 May

To all sons of Holy Mother Church inspecting these letters Hugh etc. sendeth greeting etc. It is meet that those things which are determined by an agreement, by judgment, or by arbitrament, in order that scruples of the contention reawakening may not recur, shall be strengthened by the support of the bishops of the places; for the cutting off of the matter for strife and the fostering of the beauty of peace.

Seeing that some inhabitants of the town of LLawhaden of our diocese, namely the parishioners of the parish Church of St. Hugh there, of the one part, by our beloved etc. Sir William Wilcok master or warden of our College of St Davids sufficiently appointed as their Proctor for this as well as the inhabitants of the town or hamlet of Bletherstone within the precinct of the said parish of LLawhaden and well known to be of the same parish, by Master Richard Ph[ilip] rector of Herbrandston of our diocese their Proctor, of the other part, namely on 19 May of the year written below, within the Hall of our manor of Lamphey in the presence there of very many persons, of whom more below, together with David ap Thomas and Jankyn Ph[ilip] of the aforesaid town of LLawhaden, and of Bletherstone aforesaid, Griffin Gwyn and Philip Eliot, appointed then for and in the name of the parishioners of the aforesaid parish, appeared before us, having the material of a long pending strife or dissension between them about the contribution of the said inhabitants of Bletherston to the remakings and repairs to be paid yearly as required in the aforesaid parish Church of LLawhaden as well in the ornaments as in all other things whatsoever necessary there to be repaired and found by the parishioners of the same parish with one accord after and according to the form of a constitution Unfinished !!!!!.

1490 10 July

On 10 July in the year and place abovesaid(Llamphey) he admitted one Sir Phillip ap Ieuan chaplain, to the perpetual vicarage of the parish Church of St Martin Manorbier and instituted him in the same etc. then vacant by the resignation of Sir John Dyer last vicar there: on the presentation of Master Owen Pole rector of the same Church . And Sir Philip had letters thereof etc.

1490 19 October

On 19 October in the year above at Llamphey Sir John Coke chaplain was admitted by the Rev. stc. to the vicarage of Marloes and instituted in the same then vacant by the resignation of Sir Thomas Ewen last vicar there , on the presentation of the master and fellows of the College of St David's patrons of the said vicarage

1490 21 October

On 21 October he collated to Sir John Makeram chaplain , the vicarage of Overam and instituted him in the same then vacant by the resignation of Sir John Coke last vicar there and in his collation.

1535 the vicar at Lamphey is recorded as having an annual income of £5 8s quite low by the standards of the day

1546 in an exchange of property forced upon Bishop Barlow, he alienated Lamphey, the richest of his episcopal manors, and one of his most delightful houses. Technically, it was handed over to the Crown, but it was soon transferred to the powerful magnate, Richard Devereau. In part, greed and local pressure made it expedient for Barlow to surrender such a valuable estate; in part, it was a reflection that, already, Tudor bishops were much impoverished in comparison with their medieval predecessors and could not live on the same lavish Scale. The surrender of Lamphey was also a hint of the policy pursued rigorously in the later sixteenth century, the policy of scaling down the wealth of the episcopate. Barlow's recompense was sadly inadequate: he received the advowson of the rectory and vicarage of Carew.

1576 Richard Devereux Earl of Essex and holder of Lamphey Palace from the King died in Ireland His son Robert age nine succeeded and his widow Countess Lettice, then married the Earl of Leicester and his daughter Dorothy (some say Penelope) married Sir Thomas Perrott son of Sir John Perrott

George Devereux brother of Richard then lived at Lamphey and the nephew Robert Earl of Essex lived there with him until he was twenty two

Robert Earl of Essex became a favourite of Elizabeth I and she bestowed Carew Castle on him but later fell in disgrace and was beheaded in 1601 on Tower Hill.

With Robert Earl of Essex lived and fought and died Sir Gilly Meyrick of Gellyswick, Milford Haven son of Dr Rowland Meyrick, Bishop of Bangor, and Katherine daughter of Owen Barrett of Gellywick.

Late 1500's Rice Philip Scarfe of Lamphey is recorded as being one of the corn merchants who was buying up the corn for export in a time of shortage 1595 reputed to be still deer in the Deer Park which was 144 acres in extent . It lay on the east side of the palace and was surrounded by a high limestone wall which the tenants of the manor had to keep in repair.

1601 Robert Devereaux , 2nd Earl of Essex, and 3rd Viscount Hereford, held estates at Lamphey, great grandson of Walter Devereux, Lord Ferrers - was executed by Elizabeth I with him was executed Sir Gelly Meyrick

February Rice Philip Scarfe of Lamphey who was originally from Carmarthenshire and who held a 21 year lease of the manor of Lamphey from Lettice Countess of Leicester was accused of various crimes by a group which included members of the Meyricks, Cluny, Adams and Wogan families; this matter ended up in the Star Chamber and also involved the various families organising a raid on Lamphey palace in which they seized goods and over 400 sheep.

1613 Robert Devereaux (1591-1646) 3rd Earl of Essex lived for a brief time 1613 at Lamphey The grandson of Robert Devereux Earl of Essex had some property restored by James I he seems to have lived at Lamphey and in 1620/1 he, John Meyrick of Fleet at Monkton near Pembroke and Rowland Laugharne of St Brides fought in Holland.

1642- at the outbreak of the Civil war the lease of the manor of Lamphey was held by Major John Gunter who was serving with the Parliamentary Army. It was raided by Captain Crowe of the Royalist side who took a large number of cattle.

Rev George Holcombe to Charles Moss Bishop of St Davids

Mr Seall the vicar of St Mary's etc Pembroke is now with me and has desired me to present his duty to your lordship and to lay before you the following' particulars

That, as he lives in Shropshire and has expectations, particularly from Lord Clive, whose Principal seat is in the parish where he lives he humbly and earnestly entreat that your lordship will be pleased to dispense for some time at least with his personal residence at Pembroke, and that he will take care that his parishes shall be served by an able curate who will perform the duty as fully and as conscientiously as he himself could do were he personally resident. That the principal inhabitants of his parishes have recommended to him Mr. Williams, the vicar of Hodgeston in the deanery of Pembroke, whom I know personally and who performs parochial duties both as a Reader and preacher extremely well and who lives in the town of Pembroke and' is a man besides of sobriety and of a good character. The present curate's names is Hughes, vicar of Landphey. The parishes do not much approve of him to continue the curate as his manner of reading and preaching is not so edifying, and indeed to my own knowledge I am certain that as an officiating minister he is greatly inferior to Mr. Williams. Mr. Seall seems to be a modest, well-meaning man and has desired me to address your lordship upon this affair previously to his writing to you which he soon himself intends to do.

Your lordship's tenant of Castle Morrice has at length paid me the rent you expect of him.

1725 Nov 27. Carew.

David Thomas To Adam Ottley esq.. At Pitchford Near Salop.

Your Former Goodness In Befriending My Collation To The Vicarage Of Carew And Lamphey upon Mr. N. Morgan's recommendation, for which I return most hearty thanks, induces me to assume this liberty of informing you of the hardship I labour under, my benefice by the two parishes not exceeding £30 per annum a very short and small allowance for discharging of two separate areas, that of Lamphey being a vicarage endowed only with the small tithes of the parish. I presume you are party sensible that the small tithes of Lamphey Court have been hitherto illegally detained from me (which I compute to amount to two-thirds of my due there, the Bounty money excepted).

Given to understand that there is a concurrent lease granted of the episcopal tithes of Lamphey, I humbly beg leave here to insert that the Right Rev. Father in God, my ever esteemed patron lately deceased, of whose religious care and pious zeal for the Church I've had sufficient reason always to conceive a firm and undoubted good opinion, was graciously pleased to promise he would endeavour to recover the said small tithes to the vicarage of Lamphey if that lease should happen to be renewed in his lifetime, to the present lessee or any other.

Which encourageth me humbly to request you'd please to be so kind as to satisfy me in this particular whether the vicarial tithes are reserved to the poor incumbent in the concurrent lease. And with all submission to desire your favourable assistance on this occasion in my behalf in order to regain the same in kind, or some reasonable allowance in lieu thereof

1727 December 18. Haverfordwest.

W. Tucker To [POSSIBLY Adam Ottley].

The favour of your last I received which gives me the pleasure of learning that you are well. I am desired by Sir Arthur Owen to give you the trouble of this, which I should not do, but that as he is my wife's relation I could not well refuse, for which reason I hope you'll be pleased to excuse my freedom herein. It is with respect to Lamphey lease: as he is the old tenant therein he is willing if you please to favour him to continue in the tenancy thereof, and will give as much as any for it. He begs you'll please to admit him to treat with you about it. I humbly ask pardon for the trouble herein and take the favour of your answer soon, which I shall esteem an additional obligation laid on me
Ottley MS 510

1766 August 8. Pulchrohen.

[Rev.] Geo[Rge] Holcombe To Robert Lowth, Bishop Of St Davids .

Since I wrote to Mr. Barsen about Lamphey rectory I have been informed that its real value may be set down from £25 to £30 per annum. The reason why its value is not more considerable is owing to the alienation of the best tenements in it from the see in Queen Elizabeth's reign.

Postscript: Sir William Owen gathers the tithe corn of the parish with his own, which make it difficult to ascertain the real value, but I think it cannot exceed £30 per annum.

1839 Topographical Dictionary of Wales

Lamphey (called by the Welsh LLANFFYDD), a parish, in the hundred of Castlemartin, union and county of Pembroke, South Wales, 2 miles (E.) from Pembroke, on the road to Tenby; containing 407 inhabitants. This place, commonly called Lampha, and so spelled on a communion salver bearing date 1743, seems to owe its name to the title of the Church; the compound Welsh word Llanffydd, "the Church of the faith," having been perhaps corrupted by the Flemings to Lanfoi, and gradually to the modern orthography Lamphey. It was probably among the earliest of the settlements of the Normans in South Wales: according to Buck, as quoted by Grose, it was the head of a lordship marcher; and it anciently contained one of the princely residences of the bishops of St Davids, of which there are considerable remains. At what period it first became the property of the archiepiscopal, and subsequently episcopal, Church of St Davids is not precisely known; but a deed dated at Lamphey, in the middle of the thirteenth century, by Bishop Carew is still extant; and, according to Giraldus Cambrensis, it appears to have been the residence of a Bishop in the time of Arnulph de Montgomery, who possessed himself of this part of the principality in the reign of Henry I. At least a great part of the episcopal palace (even the whole of it, according to some writers) was built by Bishop Gower, in 1335. The various styles of architecture which characterize its ruins show plainly that it was the work of successive periods, and that it did not attain the splendour for which it was remarkable, but by the accumulated additions and improvements of its successive proprietors, of whom Gower probably built the great Hall and the square tower, distinguished for their beautiful open parapets.

This portion of the possessions of the see of St Davids was alienated to the crown in the time of Bishop Barlow, by Henry VIII., who granted Lamphey to Devereux, Viscount Hereford, father of the unfortunate Earl of Essex, whose youth was passed in this place. After the attainder of the earl, in the reign of Elizabeth, the estate was purchased by Sir Hugh Owen, of Orielton, by whose descendant Sir John Owen, Bart., it was sold to Charles Matthias, esq., who in 1823 erected a handsome mansion, called Lamphey Court, with a fine portico of four Ionic columns, near the ruins of the ancient episcopal palace. Besides this seat, the parish contains several genteel residences belonging to other families. Portclew, a mansion rebuilt some years ago, is beautifully situated on an eminence overlooking Freshwater bay, where the fine smooth and firm sands are alike inviting for walking or riding. Lamphey Park occupies a pleasant situation on the north side of the valley, in grounds which contain some pleasing scenery and are tastefully disposed; and North Down is also a genteel residence. The house of Lamphey Park is situated in the midst of what was formerly the deer-park, of which the boundary wall remains: the view hence westward is singularly fine, embracing within half a mile both the venerable ruins of the palace and the adjacent modern mansion of Lamphey Court, and further on, the town of Pembroke, its magnificent Castle towering over it, and the river, as an expansive lake, stretching beyond it in the distance.

The parish, which in form is nearly a parallelogram, is washed by the sea on the south side, where is the picturesque little bay called Freshwater bay, with a good bathing place. It comprises about 2000 acres of meadow and arable land in nearly equal quantities. The village, with its lofty-steepled Church built by the Flemings, stands in a fine valley, screened on the south from the Atlantic storms by gradually rising ground, whence a noble view is obtained of the Bristol Channel, and in tolerably clear weather, of the opposite coast of Somerset and Devon, together with Lundy Island: steamers and coasting-vessels pass close by the rocky promontory forming the west side of the bay. Limestone of excellent quality is quarried to a considerable extent for building purposes, and also burnt into lime.

The living is a discharged vicarage, rated in the King's Books at £5. 8. 11½., and endowed with £600 royal bounty; present income, £115; patron, the Bishop of St Davids. No tithes are payable from the land in that part of the parish which was alienated from the see in the reign of Henry VIII., and which constitutes a large portion of it, including the park, which alone contains many hundred acres of fine land. The titheable portion, under the Commutation Act, is subject to a rent-charge of £60 payable to the Bishop, and one of £73 to the vicar, who has also a glebe of four acres, valued at £12 per annum. The Church was thoroughly repaired in 1826, partly by subscription, and partly by an additional Church rate, aided by a grant of £100 from the Incorporated Society for promoting the erection and enlargement of churches and Chapels. Two hundred additional sittings were obtained, of which, in consideration of the gift from the society, 135 are for ever free and unappropriated. A National day and Sunday school has been established, for which a commodious room, with a neat cottage for the master, was erected in 1828, by means of a grant from the National Society of £70, and £50 given by Mr. Matthias, the deficiency being made up by the vicar.

The remains of the ancient palace, nearly adjoining the village, amply display its former splendour. They consist of the great Hall seventy-six feet in length and twenty in width, the walls of which are surmounted by an elegant open parapet of delicate tracery; another apartment, sixty feet Long and twenty-six wide; the chancel of the Chapel, of which the east window, still entire, is a beautiful composition, enriched with elegant tracery; the grand entrance on the west; and the square tower above noticed, now inclosed within the gardens of the new mansion, in which it forms an interesting object. The greatest attention is paid to the preservation of these fine ruins, and every precaution has been taken by the proprietor of Lamphey Court to arrest the decay into which this venerable pile was rapidly falling from previous neglect.

1844 9 August the Cricket match between Lamphey and Pembroke brought together a large concourse of the gentry of the neighbourhood.

1943 American Troops of the 110 US Infantry Regiment mainly from Pennsylvania were stationed at Lamphey

In the Korean War Lt John Davey of Lamphey won the MC

Education

In c.1828 a National School was established which was described by Lewis in 1834 as 'a commodious schoolroom' (for about 100 children) and 'a neat cottage for the residence of the master and mistress.' The National Society contributed £70 and Charles Mathias £50, a deficiency then being made up by the Vicar, Rev. J B Byers. The land was provided by Mathias on a 60 years lease in exchange for another piece of land belonging to the parish. Both day and Sunday schools appear to have been held, the latter perhaps predating the building.

According to the report on The State of Education in Wales 1847

.—on the 21st of December I visited the above school. It is held in the National school-room at Lamphey.

It was built by means of a grant from the National Society of £70., and £50. given by Charles Matthias, esq., of Lamphey Court, the deficiency being made up by the Vicar. It was built on a piece of ground granted by the former gentleman in exchange for another plot belonging to the parish, and was secured by lease in trust for the term of sixty years, seventeen of which only have expired.

The school-room was commodious and well supplied with apparatus. The master seemed a very intelligent man. The books were well kept. There was also a visitors book, in which I noticed testimonials of high approbation from several gentlemen, and amongst others from the Rev. John Allen, Her Majesty's Inspector. The number present at the time of my visit was comparatively small on account of the badness of the weather. I heard the first class Read the fifth chapter of the book of the Prophet Daniel. The reading upon the whole was remarkably good, and the answers given to my questions were quick and ready. They were able to give me a correct account of the history of Daniel, Shadrach, Meshech, and Abednego. Knew by what names they were called by King Belshazzar. I had also a very good account of the history of Moses and the captivity of the children of Israel, as well as the history of Joshua. Two of the boys, about the age of fourteen, were at the time of my visit engaged in making maps of the Holy Land. These maps were (for boys of their age) remarkably well done. I examined the copy-books of the pupils and found those of the senior classes very well written and those of the juniors proportionally so.

The questions in mental arithmetic were very well answered and some few in geography. This and the Sunday-school which is held in the same place are the only schools in the parish of Lamphey. Wages are about 8s. per week on the average.

The second class Read the sixth chapter of the book of Daniel; most of them read very well, and could answer a few questions upon what they had been reading. The third was reading the miracles of our Saviour, and the fourth was in monosyllables and letters.

Freshwater East

A large bay located about 2 miles south of Lamphey.

There is a fine sandy beach backed by sand dunes, that used to be used by Pembroke Dockyard workers as a holiday place during the school holidays. Older workers used to tell stories of them going out at weekends to visit their wives and children who spent the whole holiday camping there mostly using ex-army WW1 Bell tents furnished with tables, chairs beds and even sofa's, hurricane lamps and paraffin stoves for light and cooking. Some of the older men in the Dockyard with whom I worked told stories of the living in Bell tents out there during the period of bombing raids of Pembroke Dock. They stayed out there (without schooling) while their fathers stayed and worked in Pembroke Dock.

Did this encampment have any connection with the stories from the Grotto (the local pub at Freshwater East) of lights being seen down near the beach which could have been signalling enemy raiders? The more likely explanation I heard was that it was smugglers.

Today there is a holiday home development and a Caravan park. The County Council wishes to concentrate various types of holiday accommodation here. Reasonable access to the beach, but a shortage of summer parking.

Originally part of the Bishop of St David's manor of Llamphey.

(Churches of Pembrokeshire -- Slater).

There is a small ruined Chapel-of-ease under Llamphey parish, probably 13c.

Promontory Fort

Freshwater East Camp This camp is placed at the end of a broad promontory overlooking Freshwater Bay. The landward approach from the north is defended by two lines of slightly curved ramparts. The inner bank has a length of 70 feet, rising from the interior level to a height of 10 feet and falling 20 feet to a ditch having a width of 10 feet, and for the greater part trenched out of rocky ground. The other bank, which has been much disturbed, is about 20 yards beyond the inner defence. It has a length of 45 feet, is lower than the main bank, and its ditch is practically obliterated the entrance faced east; that through the main rampart is 10 feet wide.

Portclew Llamphey

Porth Clew Chapel

The ruins of Porth Clew Chapel stands on the cliffs above Freshwater East Bay, on a field known as Chapel Field (Tithe Schedulers No. 121). Of its history nothing is known. The plan shows a rectangular chamber, 28 feet by 14 feet, with a north doorway 4 feet wide, that still retains the flag-stone in which the pin of the door revolved. The east wall is entire to the gable, that to the south has a height of 10 feet; of those to the north and east only their foundations are left. One splayed light opens to the east, one to the north, and probably two to the south. The masonry base of the altar is in situ, and to its right is a stone bracket, 5 feet from the present level. In the south-east angle is an aumbry 4 feet above the floor. Adjoining the Chapel is a weak spring of water which was probable venerated and may have given occasion for the erection of the building.

Portclews

An imposing house in the southern end of the parish on high ground overlooking the cove of Freshwater East and the waters of the Bristol Channel beyond.

Lewis in 1840 speaks of 'Portclew, a modern mansion, the residence of Thomas Parry esq., is beautifully situated on an eminence commanding a fine view of the sea.'

In 1326 Thomas Wettar of Portclew was described as a landowner in the fee of Lamphey, part of the temporalities of the See of St Davids.

In 1560 Edmund Poyer and John Philips are described as "of Portclew" .

By 1595 it was held by Lewis Bishop whose descendants remained there until the death of Lewis Bishop after 1771. The Bishop family had come to Pembrokeshire in about 1600
The well-known family of west Wales landowners, the Parrys, succeeded the Bishops when John Parry married Margaret Bishop, daughter and heiress of Lewis Bishop and came to live at his wife's home. John became High Sheriff in 1772. Their son William Parry married Ann Kemm, second daughter of Henry Kemm of Northdown, their marriage settlement having been made on October 22 1801 Their daughter, Mary Ann Parry, married at Lamphey on Jan 26 1830 the Rev Francis George Leach son of Abraham and Catherine Leach of Corston. Francis died in 1876 aged 80 and his wife died in 1894 aged 86. By the mid-19th century the Parrys had left Portclew and Portclew House became the home of Col. William Morrison whose descendants were still there in 1904. The district around Portclew had a number of Properties which bore the name. In 1786 John Parry was owner-occupier; Sir Hugh Owen owned East Portclew; Sarah Bastin owned Little Portclew and Abraham Leach owned another farm of the same name.
In 1894 there were four Properties in the area: Portclew; Portclew Burrows; Upper Portclew and Little Portclew.
By 1950 most of these Properties remained including Portclew House, occupied by the Uphill family.

Landshipping,

A quiet backwater near the confluence of the two Cleddau rivers. Once a great anthracite mining district, the community was shattered by the Garden Pit Disaster of 1844. There were two Quays here. Landshipping Quay proper was the local exporting point, while the little Quay on the shore of the Eastern Cleddau was used by the ferry from the Picton side.

Acc/to The Pembrokeshire Coast National Park by Dillwyn Miles

Although the origin of the name "Long shippen".indicates an agricultural environment (shippen means cow house), Landshipping was a centre of the Daugleddau coalfield until the tide broke into the Garden Pit with the loss of over 40 lives in 1844. A ruined house that once knew splendour and derelict Quays are all that remain.

The Coal Industry in Pembrokeshire -- George Edwards

General

Pembrokeshire in the west of the of the South Wales Coalfields was producing anthracite of high quality – Carbon content of 93 to 96% with only 1% ash. It had been exploited since the beginning of the 14c if not earlier. The quality of the coal and the facility of transport by sea lead to the expansion of the trade so that by 1800, despite the small extent of the coal deposited, Pembrokeshire coal mining had attained prominence. The coal at that time was shipped to many parts of England and Wales and to several European countries. Later Pembrokeshire mining was overshadowed by that of the main South Wales coalfield, where new methods of pumping, hauling and ventilation were more easily introduced. Pembrokeshire coal mining remained rural in character and great industrial centres never developed.

Veins

Many Veins less than 2ft thick –

Timber vein up to 8ft thick Hook and Landshipping area

Tides

Dry at low tide – at least 16ft of water at neap tides and 26ft at spring tides

Old Pits

Many abandoned as soon as difficulties of extraction was encountered – only to be reopened more than once as mining technique advanced and more capital became available.

1603 George Owen

Commented on the increased use of coal because of the shortage of timber Pembrokeshire anthracite was used by smiths, for malt kilns and the production of lime. It was at that time eighth in the list of exports from Pembrokeshire/

Older Methods of Working

“the digginge of coale is of ancient tyme used in Pembrokeshire but not in such skillful sort as of now it is, for in former tyme they used no engines (windlasses) for lifting up of the coales out of the pitt but made their entrance slope so as the people carried the coales upon their backes alonge stayres which they called lande wayes”. – “In oulde tymes” pits of four fathoms were considered great labour.

In 1600 20 fathoms (120ft) was considered a deep pit. Water had to be raised by barrel and windlass.

Owen described a typical colliery as employing 16 people

The working day was from 6am to 6pm allowed for a brief rest during which men ate their 'allowance' which was ½d in Bread to every man and 4d in drink among a dozen

Cresselly district – John Allen – April 1748 “I can't think there will be near eno. (coal) in all Milford to supply the trade ...several of my most constant customers are enquiring for a little coal as they are most apprehensive of the scarceness of it.”

In the Pembrokeshire coalfield there were many small concerns operated by workmen adventurers. There were others operated by local landowners –

Sir Hugh Owen at Landshipping

[Acc to Francis Jones (with additions)]

The manor of Landshipping was held in the 16th Century by the families of Nash and Wyrriot. From the Wyrriots it passed by marriage when in the late 1500's Elizabeth Wyrriot of Orielton daughter and heiress of George Wyrriot married Hugh Owen of Bodeon in Anglesey and they made their home at Orielton.

From this will it is evident that the family had an interest in coal mining. I could not find any trace of the sites of coal mines at Coedcanlas which is right on the southern edge of the coal bearing area but certainly Freystrop had mines by 1650's as there is a record of the Rev Peregrine Philipps riding home one night and falling down a mine shaft. I would suspect it was though and had been for a Long time. I was given information that a mine in Landshipping had been part of a marriage settlement in the early 1100's but although I tried I was unable to locate the records.

The Orielton estate had a house at Coedcanlas (assessed at 10 hearths for tax 1670) as well as a house at Llanshipping (assessed in 1670 as 20 hearths for tax)

Sir Hugh Owen changed sides so many times during the Civil War and Commonwealth but whatever his views were he managed to keep his estates at the Restoration. He married first Frances daughter of Sir John Philipps of Picton Castle by whom he had four children but both sons died young, he then married Katherine, widow of John Lewis of Prescoed. He died in 1670 His son Sir Hugh Owen 2nd Baronet succeeded. MP from 1678 to 1681 He had been born about 1645 and is recorded as living at Landshipping and Orielton. He granted his mother Katherine six farms and she is recorded as living at Landshipping

Sir Hugh Owen lived for a time at Landshipping, remodelled the house and added a Water Folly. He added considerably to the Orielton estate by marrying Anne only daughter and heiress of Henry Owen of Maesoglen Anglesey who was also heiress of her Uncle Colonel Hugh Owen of Bodeon bringing those estates to Orielton. He also purchased the Lamphey estates. He died at Bristol January 1699 and was buried there. His second wife Katherine died a month later and is buried in St Twynell's Church. In the administration of her goods she is described as “of LongShipping”

Sir Arthur Owen eldest son of Sir Hugh and his first wife Anne Owen became the 3rd Baronet on the death of his father in 1699. He was very prominent in public life a MP and Lord Lieutenant, and recorded as living at Landshipping; he married Emma only daughter of Sir William Williams Speaker of the House of Commons. He died in 1754.

His heir was his eldest son Sir William Owen also of Landshipping was born about 1697 and thus the 4th Baronet. Sir William was again prominent in public life, MP and sat in the House of Commons for 51 years, was Lord Lieutenant and Custus Rotulorum of Pembrokeshire and Haverfordwest like his father before him and his son after.

He purchased the Prendegast Estate near Haverfordwest to add to the Orielton Estates.

His wife was 1725 Elizabeth daughter and co-heiress of Thomas Lloyd of Grove near Pembroke who he married in 1725 and by 1743 had bought out the shares of his wife's co-heiresses. Their only child died in infancy and Elizabeth soon after. He then married his first cousin Anne daughter of John Williams of Chester, she died in 1764 and he died in 1781. It was Sir William who was responsible for building the new house using materials from the old.

Sir William's heir was his eldest son by his second wife Sir Hugh Owen who became the 5th Baronet of Orielton, Landshipping and Bodeon was MP, Colonel of Pembrokeshire Militia and Lord Lieutenant and Custus Rotulorum of Pembrokeshire and Haverfordwest. He married Anna daughter of John Colby of Bletherston who was “much younger than him and her fortune was much inferior to his” in 1775 and they had an only child Hugh born at Orielton on 12 September 1782. They lived at Orielton and Landshipping where “they kept open house and entertained on a princely Scale”

Sir Hugh Owen was 57 years old when he died in 1786 but his wife Lady Anna Owen lived for 37 more years and died in 1823. They were both buried at Monkton. She during her widowhood lived mainly at Bath and London. When she did visit Pembrokeshire she lived at Orielton and Lawrenny but never Landshipping for some unknown reason.

1786 Sir Hugh's heir was his 4 year old son Sir Hugh Owen the 6th Baronet and his mother was insistent that the management of her son's affairs should be in wholly in her hands and those of her brother John Colby who was appointed receiver for the estate. In this she was opposed by the other trustee of the will Dr John Jones of Haverfordwest which resulted in acrimonious lawsuits lasting over 16 years and ended in triumph for the determined mother. He had a private tutor who prepared him for Eton as well as teaching him Welsh. The fees at Eton were high £1020 19s for the first year but the rental for the Orielton estate was £5157. He then went on to Christ Church College Oxford where he matriculated in 1801. He was 18.

The Landshipping colliery probably consisted in 1786 of the following pits all within a one and a quarter mile radius

Garden Pit Coal Mine – an old pit not in use.

Lady Berwick Coal Mine

Llanstinan Pit Coal Mine

Merthyr Pit Coal Mine

North Wood Pit Coal Mine

Orielton Pit Coal Mine

Oxhouses Pit Coal Mine

According to the marks of George Edward's map (The Coal Industry in in Pembrokeshire) there could have been another four but some might not have been in production.

William Humphreys the Orielton Agent and Steward had been informing Dr Jones of estate matters which Dr Jones had used in evidence in his law suite to get administration of the estate. He stated that Lady Owen has misappropriated funds (the funds being spent for maintaining her residence at Eton where the heir was at school) which should have been used for the maintenance of Landshipping house . Her reply was to close the house dismissing all the staff except one who would act as caretaker and was allowed to keep a cow and chickens as part of her salary in the house grounds. She also dismiss William Humphreys.

He had she stated to the Court advanced £1750 8s 2d out of estate funds to certain colliers before they had completed their work. Their rates of pay were 45/- per hundred for all coal under level, 40/- for all coal above level and 12/- for culm, to be calculated according to the fathom. Mr Humphreys was paid £100 a year wages but Lady Owen declared “ he lives like a man of property and estate, keeps a Hop shop and sells corn at extravagant rates to the collieries and beyond Market prices.

She said he had neglected to look after the sale of coal and the organisation of the collieries excusing himself by saying “That matter don't concern me” or “That not my lookout”. He had also misapplied large sums both in selling timber and coal. Lady Owen submitted that the total revenue from the Owen Collieries in Pembrokeshire from 31st December 1784 to 15th January 1786 was £1,378 2 9d while disbursements had reached £1333 1 10d. This only left a profit of £45 0 11d . Indeed she was demanding Humphreys to give an account of his stewardship and would not allow “frauds so gross and iniquities so abominable to pass unnoticed” (Notes on the Orielton Chancery Proceedings D L Baker Jones NLW Journal)

In 1788 in consultation with his sister John Colby closed Landshipping Collieries as being unprofitable

Shortly after John Boston of Cresselly wrote to Colby soliciting a lease of the Colliery. The lease was to incorporate eight points

- 1] indemnity lest the infant should die before coming of age
- 2] the cost of engines erected to be refunded to the lessee
- 3] the use and liberty of turning water from the mill,
- 4] making water courses over any part of the land.
- 5] use of counting houses with the culm bank and coal yard storage houses and Quays
- 6] the lessor was to pay 1/3 part of carriage and haulage from pits to Quays and make and repair roadside
- 7] The lessee was to appoint an agent to keep accounts
- 8] Sir Hugh Owen was to keep a check steward at his own expense

It was proposed to reopen the Garden Pit which had been closed for some years. The shaft was 67 yards deep and much of the workings run beneath the estuary waters of the Cleddau and Dauceddau rivers. It was downstream of the majority of the pits which were in a cluster near Landshipping and was near the site of the proposed Jetty. It would be working Timber vein. It was also proposed to construct a tram-line to the site of the new Quay. This Quay would be able to load vessels at all stages of the tide.

John Colby Receiver of the Owen Estate wrote to Bolton and Watt re a steam engine for the colliery which was supplied in 1800

Landshipping Collieries in around 1800 it became one of the first collieries in Pembrokeshire to use the modern technology, when a steam engine was installed pumping. This machinery greatly increased productivity and the output reached over 10,000 tons per year.

[It would seem that the new steam engine was only use for pumping as 40 years later a horse whim was still being used for lowering men and raising coal (Garden pit accident 1844) According to the aerial surveys by RCAHMW several pit sites seem to have an engine house (but not the Garden Pit)]

Acc/to Welshcoalmines.co.uk.

“Garden pit was re-established in 1788 after it had been closed for some time. The shaft was 67ft deep and much of the workings ran beneath the estuary waters of the Cleddau and Dauceddau rivers”

Proof of the good management of John Colby was, that in a time of depression with the militia units have to be called out in Pembroke a profit was being made. The total annual rental of the Orielton estates was now £8,392. At that time estate owned Properties in 15 Anglesey parishes, 8 parishes in Caernarvonshire, 7 in Carmarthenshire and 38 in Pembrokeshire.

1801 Quay constructed

Sir Hugh sold the the Anglesey and Caernarvanshire estates for £93, 105 but purchased the Llanstinan estate from Mr Mathias of LlangWarren.

1809

Sir Hugh Owen the 6th Baronet died at Orielton on 8th August 1809 unmarried, age 27 and left all his real and personal estate to his second cousin John Lord of Pembroke barrister at law whose mother Corbetta ,was a sister to Sir Arthur Owen the new Baronet who inherited the title but none of the Orielton estates. John Colby managed his his nephew's estates until his nephews death in 1809

1809

Owens of Orielton 2nd Creation (including information from The History of Parliament: the House of Commons 1820-1832 D R Fisher)

Sir John Owen (previously Lord) inherited (as he told Sir Robert Peel) “a large unencumbered property” the stewardship of John Colby had been good. The personal estate part of the inheritance that he received contained just over £135,000 in gilt edged securities besides other funds but even so right from the date of his inheriting he seemed to have financial problems. Sir John took the the name and arms of Owen and took a prominent part in public life. His eldest son Hugh named after the 6th Baronet also used the Owen surname and thus became Hugh Owen Owen. He was born in 1803

1810 he purchased property in Monkton from Viscount Hereford for £54,545 but he had to borrow the money from Lewis Mathias of LlangWarren secured on the manor and lands of Monkton.

1811 Fenton mentions roofless mansion at Landshipping

Sir John a lawyer by profession who became on inheriting the Orielton estate leader of the Tory party in Pembrokeshire. He became MP in 1812 for Pembrokeshire after enormous election expenses .and then came to an “arrangement” with John Campbell 1st Baron of Stackpole to retain the seat for two elections unopposed. He continued to sit until 1841 when he then sat for the Pembroke boroughs.

1812 Appointed Vice-Admiral of Pembrokeshire

1813 He was created a Baronet

1814 He bought the manor of Ford in Haycastle parish for £19,000 and to help pay for it mortgaged his Llanstinan estate for £11,000

1819 Sir John's eldest daughter married John Meares of Eastington

1820 This was the last election that he would not be opposed in under the arrangement made with John Campbell. Sir John's commitments and debts necessitated the selling of the manor of Llamphey for £35,000 and Properties in the parishes of Llanstinan and Penally for £15,245 to Charles Mathias of LlangWarren. Of this £50,745, £25,545 was to be retained by Mathias in order to reduce the mortgage secured on Owen's manor of Monkton.

1820 Sir John's younger brother Edward Lord had speculated in land in Tasmania (Orielton Estate Tasmania) on their behalf and Sir John tried to get him a Government appointment but with no success – maybe because of his liaison with Maria Riseley a convict transported for stealing from a dwelling house. He acquired her as his servant in 1804 they had two children then married in 1808. In 1820 Edward found out that Maria had a relationship with Charles Rowcroft 18 years her junior whom Edward charged with “Criminal Conversation “with his wife and won £100 damages. Edward also fathered a child by a convict Anne Fry and was also in a relationship with with a child nurse in England by whom he had five children.

1821 Pembrokeshire landowners were having problems selling land because of agricultural distress.

1824 Appointed Lord Lieutenant of Pembrokeshire

1825 Sir John became a director of the Pembrokeshire Slate and Iron Company but suggestions were made that one aim was to benefit Sir John's quarries and would only be profitable if a rail road was made to serve Sir John's Landshipping Collieries and quarries. Plans for this were in cooperation with the mines of Morgan of Tredegar were included as part of the marriage settlement of Hugh Owen Owen and Angelina Morgan.

1825 Hugh Owen Owen married Angelina the youngest daughter of Sir Charles Morgan MP for Monmouthshire and rented a house in Pall Mall and leased a house at Williamston. He had a income from the interest of £10,000 settled on his bride and £10,000 invested in the Morgan estates including collieries in Monmouthshire

Work was being undertake to develop the colliery at Landshipping and a slate quarry

1825 Sir John was trying to encourage the local gentry to to restore confidence in the in the Haverfordwest Bank Phillips and Company which had to suspend payment on 21st December 1825

1826 Hugh Owen Owen was elected as MP for the Pembroke borough despite money being spent by the Grenvilles of Milford and John Hensleigh Allen the sitting MP. But like most elections in this period it was expensive.

1827 Sir John commanded the Castlemartin Yeomanry Cavalry in January to put down a corn riot at Fishguard making him unpopular with the poorer people.

The quarry was closed but later it reopened but was not profitable and there were industrial disputes.

Edward Lord returned from Tasmania with more financial problems and in 1828 he presented a bill from the gentry, merchants and landowners (of which his brother was one) of Tasmania for an elective assembly and trial by jury; he also requested that his brother be made registrar of the supreme court in New South Wales.

1829 First wife of Sir John died. She was Charlotte Lewis Phillips of Llwynocrwn

Carmarthenshire

She and John Lord /Owen eloped to Gretna Green to be married in 1800. They had 5 children

Sir John was not opposed in the General election of August 1830

He turned down the offer from John Mirehouse of Brownslade to lease the quarry and tried to sell the Llanstinan estate for £13000 but as he had included Cilgerran in the sale for an additional £4000 there were no buyers. It was believed that Cilgarren was grossly overpriced 1830 August 4th Accident Reported in The Cambrian newspaper of the 7th & 21st August 1830.

An accident at the Landshipping Colliery as a result of an explosion of firedamp which claimed the lives of 5 miners. This is a list of the victims together with the dates of their burial and abode.

6thAugust ~ John Rees of Weston, age 24

6thAugust ~ David Rees of Weston, 20

6thAugust ~ Roger John of Weston, 17

8thAugust ~ Thomas Eynon of Landshipping, 19

23rdAugust ~ John Dally of Millbank, 16

[which mine the accident happened in is not mentioned, nor was this accident recorded in the Mining Accidents 1705- 1854 or mentioned to the Inspector in 1841] The dead were all buried at Martletwy Church

1830 October 21st Sir John married Mary Frances Stephenson and they had two children Mary Owen who married Captain A G Onslow in 1861 and Lieutenant William Owen who was killed in action at Sevastopol 29 June 1855 at the age of 20. He served in the 23rd Royal Welch Fusiliers

1830 Also within this year three daughter by his first marriage were married.

Alice Marie married Edward Marcus Whyte of Holtham Yorkshire

Eliza married Charles Parcher Lang of the Isle of Wight

Elen married George Bowen Jordon Jordan of Cardiganshire

All these weddings added to the financial burdens on the estate.

1830 November as the family and estate finances were of concern, it was decided that Owen and family should reside at Llanstinan which his father had been unable to let of sell. It was a 3800 acre estate valued at £12000 and bringing in a rental of £1,000a year.

1831 Sir John Owen owed £67,000.

Orielton Agent died Hugh Owen Owen had to act in his place and negotiated the post-enclosure land exchanges for Newport Commons.

1831 Reform Bill elections proved to be very costly both for Sir John and R F Grenville his opponent. The parties debts amounted to over £22,000. He won but after the first election there had been a petition which necessitated a second. Again he had to sell Properties In Pembroke and Monkton for £11,000

1832 Sir John had to borrow £12,000 from his son and heir Hugh Owen Owen (which sum he never paid back)

1832 Hugh Owen Owen re-elected as MP and held the seat until obliged by his father Sir John to vacate in favour of Sir James Graham in 1838.

1833 A Topographical Dictionary of Wales (S. Lewis, 1833).

The parish comprises a moderate portion of good arable and pasture land, which is enclosed and cultivated, and a considerable tract abounding with coal and culm, which is worked to a great extent upon the estate of Sir John Owen, Bart. The produce of the collieries is shipped for the supply of distant parts, from a place called Landshipping, on Milford Haven, where an excellent Quay has been constructed for that purpose. In this parish was the ancient family seat of the Owens, who by marriage became proprietors of the noble estates originally belonging to the family of Wyrriot.

esq., on the Employment of Children and Young Persons in the Collieries of Pembrokeshire and on the State, Condition and Treatment of such Children and Young Persons. Landshipping COLLIERIES

[Robert Hugh Franks in his report does comment that some owners were not willing to give information and others not very cooperative when it was his wish to interview workers. Others would only give a statement of their opinions. Compared this report with the information and cooperation he received from other collieries in the area – See my notes re Saundersfoot etc.]

1841 Landshipping COLLIERIES. parish of “Mettlehog”(?), county of Pembroke.

Sir John Owen, Bart., M.P., &c., proprietor. Number of persons employed:-

Males Adults 95 Under 18 years 25 Under 13 years 16

Females Adults 18 Under 18 years 12 Under 13 years 1

Steam power, there engine, 60, 16 and 4 horse power. Mines descended by shaft, 30 and 40 fathoms deep.

No.430. Hugh Owen, esq., trustee to Sir John Owen's estate.

The number of males and females at present employed in the Landshipping Mines exceed 160 and their occupations are alike to others employed in the mines of Pembrokeshire. Children commence working about eight years of age and are chiefly employed to keep air doors or some light occupation below. Young children do the work easier than large ones and where wages are low they are preferred. Females riddle the coals and wheel above and wind below. Adults only can perform this operation as it requires great strength. Children push the wagons and each child, if a strong one, say of 14 years of age, pushed the wagon upwards of 50 yards or two younger children do the work of one. The wagons contain less than a quarter of a ton of coal. I am of the opinion that a limitation of the age at which children should work in mines is not necessary as they are not tasked above 10 hours either day or night. They work the same number of hours as the men. I know of no machinery which would render the non-employment of very young children unnecessary, nor do I think it practicable. We have no special provision for ventilation, although we have both fire and choke-damp, but we succeed in obtaining a free circulation by the use of a blowing machine and by lighting a fire at the mouth of the pit. We have had no accidents within the last two years. If workmen or children get hurt in the work it is usual for the manager to allow them to draw their wages as when at work during absence. We have not any regulations as to any given number descending the shaft together. Two men, generally, with perhaps two small children, sometimes five small children. The foreman of the works attends well to the ropes and gear and reports their condition.

1841 census Hugh Owen age 37

Frances Owen age 4

1841/42 Hugh Owen Owen had to seek refuge abroad from his creditors

1842 All the furniture and plate at Orielton were advertised for sale and Sir John moved to Taynton House near Newent in Gloucestershire

Sir John in 1842 was forced to live overseas to avoid litigation from his many creditors. (whether he went to the same destination as his opponent R F Grenville who also could not pay his creditors I do not know)

Mining Accidents 1705- 1854 1844 Landshipping colliery disaster report

1844 Garden Pit

Landshipping. Haverfordwest, Pembrokeshire. 14th. February , 1844.

The colliery was the property of Colonel Owen. The colliery had been worked for many years and the workings were carried under the River Dunleddy but for sometime this area had not been worked. When these workings were reopened the water broke in when about fifty men and boys were at work. There was a violent rush of water into the workings and they ran for their lives but about and forty lives were lost.

Immediately after the accident it was found that the ground underneath the mud on the river bed, a little above low water Mark and directly above the level, had given way and eyewitness stated that the water rushed down into the workings with great force. A contemporary writer observed-

“It is possible, that, on the minds of many who Read the account, an impression may be left, that as the calamity was occasioned by the sudden bursting of a mass of water, which, rushing at once through all the levels, penetrated directly to the exterior shaft. It may be supposed that a permanent communication would thus be opened between the pit and the river, in which case the probability of the bodies of the unfortunate men being sooner or later found, might be reasonably inferred. But this must go on the supposition that the level of the water now in the pit is the same as that of the river in all circumstances, in which case the aperture, through which the water rushed, must lie considerably lower than any part of the river’s bed left dry by the ebbing of the waters. The case, however, is known to be very different. At the time the alarm was given, the attention of some bystanders was directed to the appearance of the river at such short a distance from the Quay as could easily be known with general accuracy. In this place the waters were seen eddying and rolling in the most violent agitation, a certain proof that the part where the ground have given way, lay directly underneath. This spot, with a considerable space outside it, was left bare by the retiring river but not the most distant sign was exhibited from any such occurrence having taken place! The only conclusion is that an immense body of mud, earth and stones was forced into the opening, completely choking up the passage through which the flood had previously entered and which, it is supposed, may in time become reconsolidated as event to allow of the working of the pits, if the water now lying between it and the shaft were drained, but of this being done, no one entertains a thought. It is, therefore, almost certain that the unhappy sufferers, so suddenly overtaken by this overwhelming destruction, will be no more seen until till the earth and sea shall yield up their dead. Some men have descended the shaft and employed grapnels for a considerable time, but with no effect. There is something peculiarly touching in the perfect absence of every outward sign which indicate the calamitous event. With the exception of the machinery remaining idle and the appearance of the sullen water far down the pit, everything is the same in its external character, nothing whatever to tell the passenger that within a few yards of him forty individuals have found a grave.”

Those who died were:-

Benjamin Hart, left a wife and three children.

Benjamin Harts’ son.

William Llewellyn’s son.

Thomas Llewellyn who had a sister dependent on him.

Joseph Picton and three sons and left a wife and three children.

John Cole left a mother and sisters who were dependent on him.

Two orphans of the late Jane Wilkins.

An account of the accident was related to Mr. Dunn and he was told that only four feet of rock and sixty feet of sand were between the workings and the bottom of the river. A subscription fund was set up for the dependants of the victims and £400 was raised in a very short time.

Other report suggest that

On the 14th of February 1844, miners were at their work, when the usual water seepage, which was encountered at this mine suddenly, began to increase in volume. This concerned the miners in so much that they left the mine only to be sent back after being; reassured that all was well. One hour later the sea broke into the workings in such a deluge that 40 miners were drowned unable to escape the Torrent.

Blame was placed on an unusually high tide putting extra weight on the shallow workings

There is also a suggestion that some, if not all, of the names listed "boy" were probably women, this shows that the exploitation of women and children working in the mines was still happening even though an act of Parliament banning women from working underground, as were boys under the age of ten, was past just two years earlier.

That the mine was using a whim to raise coal is evident from the account in the Carmarthen Journal, 1844.

“The man at the whim immediately put the horses to the gallop, and succeeded in rescuing 4 men and 14 boys, when the water rushing with tremendous force up towards the mouth of the pit, which filled at the rate of 7 fathoms in a minute, rendered all further exertions unavailing.”

Another report suggests

“Without attaching blame to any party, we cannot but express a strong desire that a strict and searching examination be made, to ascertain the cause of this melancholy event. We do not mean to say, but that in spite of all human efforts accidents will occur, but we know that in many past cases they might have been averted, if due diligence and skill had been observed on the part of the mining agents. Of course these remarks are intended not to apply to the Landshipping Colliery in particular, but to mines generally.

The proprietors of mines have no right in law, to appoint any unskilful or untried man to attend to the important duties of mining agent, for in their hands are placed the lives of many fellow beings. Government would do well to appoint mining inspectors, to occasionally examine the state of all mines, and ascertain the qualifications of the managers; and thus so far, give an additional protection to the poor miners, who under the assurance and guidance of the agent, think their lives are safe and free from danger.”

From the Times February 19th 1844

“The work of this pit is completely destroyed. No blame appears to be laid to any party, as the persons whose duty it was to survey the work had considered it safe. It had been never before worked at high water, when the pressure must have been much greater than when the above accident took place. Among the numbers who have perished there are several who were fathers, with large families dependent on them for support. The distress of the widows and other can scarcely be conceived.”

The Times, London February 20 1844

“THE Landshipping Colliery, On the afternoon of Wednesday last, one of the most dreadful and destructive events ever known in Pembrokeshire took place a Landshipping Colliery, the property of Colonel Owen. The short time which has intervened has not allowed a sufficient opportunity to obtain full particulars of the sad catastrophe; but the following circumstances connected with it are believed to be substantially correct. The colliery has for very many years been in full work, giving employment to a large number of men, women and boys. It appears that on Monday last a lot of men and boys were set to work in a level which was about a quarter of a mile long, and extended a considerable distance under the bed of the river Daugledy, and which had not for about three years previously been worked, for the reason, it is said, that it was not considered safe to carry on operations there, the colliers having reported that in one place there was a leak of salt-water over their heads.

In the afternoon of Wednesday there were between 40 and 50 men and boys employed in various parts of the level. Three of the boys who were the nearest to the mouth of the pit were alarmed by hearing a violent rush of water in the interior of the work; they instantly ran to the pit’s mouth, and were only just in time to save their lives, by climbing up the sides of the pit, before the filled the level – had they been a moment later, the water would have overwhelmed them, as it did all their unfortunate companions who were in the interior. It was immediately afterwards found that a portion of the ground underneath the mud on the side of the river, had given way, and the tide, which was then flowing, was observed to rush with great force into the fissure, so as to drown the works, and render the escape of the hapless colliers utterly hopeless. Tidings of the sad calamity were quickly conveyed to the village where the workmen had resided, and as soon as the nature and extent of it were ascertained, a scene of the most heart-rending kind was exhibited among the surviving wives, mothers, and other relatives of the unfortunate colliers, which it is far easier to imagine than to describe. Immediately after the poor boys had come above ground the landing-tub was lowered to assist any who might be at the bottom of the pit, but when it was pulled up it was found to contain nothing but water. Some short time afterwards the steward of the works went down, but he could discover nothing but pieces of timber floating on the water. The greater portions of the men who have thus met a violent and untimely death have left wives and large families to deplore their loss. In addition to the incalculable amount of distress and destitution which the surviving relatives must inevitably sustain, the injury to the proprietor, and the other colliers in his employ, is tremendous, as it is thought that all the works on the estate communicate internally with each other, so that it is probable that water has extended through the whole, which may possibly occasion a total cessation of them, or, at all events, a vast outlay of money to stop the fissure and stop the water.”

Garden Pit CADW

Coal mining activity in the vicinity to Landshipping dates back to the mid 18th century. Garden Pit was reopened in 1788. Sir Hugh Owen installed a steam engine for haulage and for pumping out in around 1800. With this machinery, the shaft was extended to 67ft deep and out for a quarter of a mile under the river. Production was increased to around 10,000 tons per year, which was transported by sea transport from the Quay . Disaster struck on 14 February 1844. At around 3.30pm when 58 people were working below, the sea broke into the workings a short distance from the shore. For 33 people working further into the mine, retreat was immediately cut off. By putting the horses to a gallop on the whim, the buckets used to raise the coal managed to rescue 4 men and 14 boys. The water is reported to have risen at a rate of 7 fathoms (42 feet or 10.8m) a minute. A memorial was erected by villagers in 2002 and lists seven names where the first is given only as 'Miner'. These are believed to be women and children, even though an Act of Parliament had been passed in 1842 prohibiting women and boys under the age of 10 from working underground. OS 1st edition 25in mapping shows the bank on the north and western side of the shaft entrance and the annotation 'Old Culm Pit'. A second pit entrance (replacing Garden Pit?) is suggested by an oval depression shown some 40m away to the south. Modern aerial photography shows only an area of grass for the entrance of Garden Pit and dwelling over the site of the second pit entrance.

1844 All hopes of the family recovering from their financial problems were shattered by the Garden Pit disaster.

1852 according to the Pembrokeshire Herald April 9th 1852 William and James Owen were the agents of Col Owen of Orielton

1853 Herbert Mackworth H M Inspector of Mines reported that methods of working had changed little since Owen's Day. He found the shafts shallow, the tackle insecure and the ventilation so imperfect that the quantities of air were less than half that required for the health and vigour of the workers

“ the coal has been usually worked only by very shallow and temporary pits, affording occasional employment to the collier who, therefore, often applies himself to agriculture and other labours. The number of hands at these pits is usually small, sometimes consisting of the members of the family, of whom the women wind up and unload the coal, whilst the men and boys are at work underground. The result of these circumstances is that Pembrokeshire collier differs but little in any respect from the agricultural labourer, and his gains but little exceed the payment for work on the surface of the ground. He is too poor to move to other localities where wages are much higher; and he has frequently a freehold or other interest in his cottage or hovel.

(Saundersfoot in 1930 55% of the local colliers had smallholdings.)

He reports that the cottages were built of a mixture of mud, road scrapings, and stones thatched with straw. Low in height the houses were usually without ceiling and were partially divided into two rooms by earth or boards. No regard was paid to health when siting the cottages. Frequently they were built on a hillside or in an angle of waste ground by the roadside. The high bank hedges shutting out air and settling moisture around the walls. The fires which were kept burning continuously, often filled both rooms with offensive fumes yet the heat of such fires tended to keep the mud walls dry. When abandoned they soon crumbled leaving no trace.

Landshipping in 1801 exported 10912 ton while 80 tons were sold at the pit head. Besides the local customers at Haverfordwest, Milford and Pembroke, exports went to Pwllheli Caernarvon and Aberdovey. Dungarven in Ireland, Yarmouth, Sunderland and Maryport. A 60 ton shipment went to Barbados.

Landshipping had seen fairly consistent mining activity until 1844. In that year disaster caused by the tide breaking into the workings of the Garden pit led to the abandonment of work in the area. Mining continued at some distance from the Daucleddau but all collieries in the district ceased work in 1867. Many families migrated to other counties.

Big House

is a country house in Landshipping, on the banks of the River Cleddau which was originally built in 1750 and owned by the Owens of Orielson who were the Landshipping Coal Agents. The house was constructed using stone and roof materials from an older, ruined inland mansion (near to Clare House). This building would have been a simple rectangular design with an entrance facing South- west, before several alterations occurred. The final alterations occurred in 1830 by architect William Owen. Owen added a third storey to the western wing and moved the entrance to the North facade, between two bows that were added at the same time to look out over the River

Cleddau. His design was inspired by Slebech Hall and Picton Castle. The house remained occupied until the late 1800s when it fell into disrepair and by 1890 it was a ruin. However the cottages at the rear remained lived in until the 1970s.

In 1922 the Landshipping Estate, including Big House, was sold at auction.

A document from 1857 described Big House as having Bed Rooms, Hall Parlour, Dining Room, Drawing Room, Nursery, Library, Servants Offices, Range of Stabling, Coach House, Saddle Room & Granary Over Yard, External walled Garden, Orchards, and a wood set in nearly 6 acres.

Landshipping Gardens

The earthwork remains of formal gardens associated with Landshipping House lie to the immediate south-east of the site of the old house. The immediate topographical context is that of gentle to moderately sloping ground, falling from about 34m to 15m above sea level over a distance of about 280m.

The recorded remains comprise plots of rectilinear cultivation beds, some of which lie on artificially raised terraces and others forming a pattern of chevrons, a group of enclosed tree mounds, a raised walkway and four excavated ponds. These all lay within the scheduled area which includes one of two walled gardens. A second walled garden adjacent to the first was not measured, though some nearby earthworks, possibly referring to the old house, were recorded. The field to the immediate east of the scheduled area was also surveyed in order to record some amorphous earthworks here; their relationship to the gardens is unclear and they may refer to later buildings. All the earthworks now lie within fields enclosed by walls, demolished or partly demolished, and banks. The disposition and character of the earthworks are best appreciated by using the site plan in conjunction with aerial photographs.

The garden walls, two ponds and boundaries are depicted on the First and Second Edition Ordnance Survey 25-inch map of Pembrokeshire XXXIV, sheet 3 (1888 and 1907).

Lawrenny

– Expanding village designated as one of two “rural centres” in Local Development Plan. Resident population is boosted by a substantial number of visitors who use moorings, chalets and caravans located at Lawrenny Quay. Facilities at The Quay include a chandlery, boat yard, public house and seasonal café and in the village a Sports and Social Club, Store (social enterprise), community Hall and Independent youth hostel.

The 12th century Church with its four-storey tower gives marvellous views across the river to Carew Church, has many interesting features including a Norman font and two squints. The squints have been there since the Middle Ages to allow people to see the altar during mass. The south transept was built in the 14th or early 15th century, and housed the stone figure of a knight, identity unknown. The effigy was later moved and the tomb of Hugh Barlow now rests in its place. The chancel is where the gentry from Lawrenny Castle would sit; their entrance was linked to the Castle by a private path.

On a fine elevation further down the Haven, and commanding extensive views both of the wooded country around and of the creeks of the estuary, is the castellated mansion of Lawrenny Park (Mrs. Lort Phillips), an imposing and conspicuous structure.

Castle Gardens

This is a largely nineteenth century landscape, in which survive a grand mid-19th cent terrace and other garden features and plantings, associated with a lost house. The terrace offers spectacular views over the estuary to the south. There is also an earlier walled kitchen garden on the site.

This garden is depicted on the Ordnance Survey 25-inch map of Pembrokeshire XXXIV, sheet 14 in 1888, when it had relict hedge lines, parkland, a massive kitchen garden, terraces and carriage drives. The houses in the village were also then quipped with gardens. By (1908) the main garden was probably the same, but there had been development in the village. RCAHMW

Lawrenny is a village in the community council ward of Martletwy,

It sits on a peninsula of the Cleddau estuary upriver from Milford Haven where it branches off towards Cresswell and Carew Rivers and is in the Pembrokeshire Coast National Park. Lawrenny provides most of the central rural facilities for the Martletwy ward, including a shop, mobile post office, cricket and football clubs, village Hall and Church.

The village extends down to the Estuary to Lawrenny Quay half a mile from the centre, where there is a busy yacht station (at which I once worked as a shipwright and boat builder) and Caravan Park. Historically, the community developed around fishing, boat building and as a staging point coal from Creswell and for quarried limestone extracted from quarries upriver.

It also played a role in the Second World War as a base for Walrus seaplanes and a training centre, known as HMS Daedalus II, operated by the Fleet Air Arm.

It is now a popular yacht station and marina. Some of the holiday developments are not particularly attractive. The remains of Lawrenny Hall were pulled down just after WW2 but there are marvellous views from what would once have been a terraced garden over the Cleddau. There is a footpath from the Yacht Station up through the woods and over past the old Hall site down to the Church.

1867 Lawrenny Church (St Caradoc) June 29th 1867 Arch Camb 1888

This is rather a large Church and situated just within the grounds of the park. It has a nave with north and south transepts, chancel, and western tower. The tower is a fine one of the kind, tall and well proportioned has battlements and four short pinnaced and corbel table below it. A square turret at the north east with slit lights, belfry windows of two plain obtuse lights. On the west side a square headed Perpendicular square window of three lights. The tower is vaulted below, and opens to the nave by a plain arch. It has one string course, and the base rather swells out; there are no buttresses. The interior is rather too much modernised and that done too soon; there are regular new pews, and a new plaster ceiling. The transepts open to the nave by plain, wide, pointed arches. The chancel arch is round, and very plain. On the north side is one of the Pembrokeshire squint passages from the transept into the chancel, but the entrance from the transept is closed. In this is a sepulchral effigy under an arched recess crocketed. The effigy has been cross-legged, but the lower part is terribly mutilated; the right hand on a sword. The windows are all modern; those at the east end and in the north transept are Fair Decorated. The south transept has a large monument to the Barlows.

There is a stone bracket in the north wall of the nave, and a rude recess near the north door. The font has a square bowl of cushion shape, upon a cylindrical stem and a square base. Upon the east gable of the nave is a pointed Bell cot with two open arches for bells

Restored chiefly according to the plans of Mr Jackson in 1885. Plaster ceiling taken down, and timber roof substituted, obstructions in the squint from the north transept removed, and squint from the south transept found and opened. Sedilia and piscina in good preservation, discovered behind the plaster in the chancel, and opened out. Also three lancet windows opened in the chancel

The Parish Church dedicated to St Caradoc 1923 RCAM & Glynne , Notes Arch Camb 1888 V v 137.

The Church consists of chancel 27 ½ ft by 12 ½ ft, south transept 12 ½ ft square and western tower 21ft by 20 ft; though now of cruciform appearance, it probably was not planned as such. The south transept, known as the Lawrence Chapel, is an addition, doubtless intended to receive the tomb of the 14th or early 15th century Lord of the manor, of which the sculptured figure has been removed to another part of the Church. The north transept communicates with the chancel by a passage built across the angle, as in so many of the churches of this county. The south transept has a small plain squint. In the chancel are double sedilia with Earl English trefoiled heads, a piscina similarly arched, and a plain aumbry. The Chancel arch is low and roundheaded. The roofs and windows are modern. The font basin has been redressed, but may be of the Norman period. The tower of four storeys, the lowest being rudely vaulted, is a good example of the local style –visited 6th March 1923

The chancel arch looks Norman but the chancel with several original openings is late 13c and the transepts and nave doorways are also of that period. The squint between the north transept and the chancel has a recess containing the effigy of a cross-legged knight of c1300. There is a double bellcote over the chancel arch but a west tower was added in the 16c. The porch and the vestry are Victorian.

Lawrenny, a parish in the hundred of Narberth, county of Pembroke, 5 miles NNE from Pembroke containing 422 inhabitants. This parish is situated on a branch of Milford Haven over which it has a ferry and comprises a large portion of enclosed and well cultivated land. The surrounding scenery is pleasingly diversified and in some parts enriched with noble plantations. Lawrenny Hall the ancient seat of the late Hugh Barlow esq., who represented Pembroke and its contributory boroughs in eight successive parliaments and now a ruin, is beautifully situated on a point of land between Milford Haven on the west and a wide creek branching from it to the north east towards Creswell bay, the demesne, which is so-extensive with the parish is embellished with a rich variety of scenery presenting an agreeable contrast of wood and water; and the luxuriant groves which shaded the ancient mansion are still seen in every point of view embosoming the venerable Church which formed an interesting and highly picturesque object in the views from the Hall. This fine estate is entailed in the family of Lort Philipps of Haverfordwest esq.. Limestone both for building and to be burned for manure abounds in this parish; and the quarrying and burning of it affords employment to a portion of the inhabitants a great number of whom are also engaged during the winter season in dredging for oysters which are found here in great abundance and conveyed principally to the London Market, in boats from Chatham and Rochester, for the loading of which the coast affords every facility.

The living is a discharged rectory in the archdeaconry and diocese of St David's rated in the King's books at £13 and in the patronage of Mrs. Barlow. The Church dedicated to St Caradoc, is a venerable cruciform structure in the early style of English architecture with an elegant square embattled tower which is seen to great advantage from almost every side rising above the rich foliage by which the body is concealed. In a sepulchral Chapel belonging to the family of Barlow is a splendid monument to the memory of the late Hugh Barlow esq., consisting of an altar tomb of variegated marble, on which is placed an elegant sarcophagus of White marble, bearing the family arms of Barlow and Crespigny; this monument was erected by his widow, who was of the latter family and who also placed in the Chapel two superb vases of alabaster, four ft. in height, supported on pedestals of White marble.

There is a place of worship for Wesley Methodists.

This is one of the four parishes to which Dr Jones bequeathed in 1698 considerable property for the relief of decayed housekeepers and the apprenticing of children with a discretionary power to his executer and brother, the Rev. William Jones, to whose memory a handsome mural tablet has been erected in the Church of this place to add other parishes; the portion assigned to Lawrenny from the produce of this charity is about £30 per annum, appropriated pursuant to the directions of the testator. The poor are supported by an average annual expenditure of £171 2s.

Lawrenny Quay

The Quay was built in the 18th century to provide easier access for seagoing vessels. It measures some 190m in length and has a stagger in its wharf frontage as its eastern end. Coal and limestone was brought to the Quay from Cresswell and the Williamston quarries in barges and transhipped. It was the landing place for ferries across the Daugleddau and Carew River, and shipbuilding was also undertaken here. Oysters were also exported from here. This hub of maritime activity is reflected in the 1841 census which lists 15 watermen, 12 mariners, 3 shipwrights, 6 apprentice shipwrights and a ferryman. Eventually the development of larger Quays further down the river and the decline of the coal and limestone industries, meant the end of trading from Lawrenny. The Quay continues in use with an all-states-of-tide landing stage and a yacht hauling out station on the former site of seaplane base .

Pier

Lawrenny Ferry Seaplane Base;Royal Naval Air Station

The only visible evidence for this marine base consists of the seaplane slipway. Although, a blister type hangar, a concrete parking area and Nissen huts were originally constructed nearby.

Event and Historical Information:

This seaplane base was used by a Seaplane Training Squadron (764 Squadron) from May 1941, although it was not officially commissioned until 1 February 1942. Accommodation and administration was provided within local cottages and Nissen huts. Westland Walruses were the main type of seaplane being accommodated. These were supplemented by Sikorsky Kingfishers towards the end of 1942. In 1943, Sea Otter spotter planes were added. The squadron was disbanded on 24 October 1943 and the station was placed into care and maintenance until officially closed in 1944.

Laurennny in Milford Haven L Morris 1743

Here large ships take in Coal and Culm, which are brought them in barges from Cresswell, and they may lie here safe in three fathoms at low water; but the place will be inevitably spoiled in a few years unless persons in power will take care to prevent vessels throwing their ballast out in the channel.

Lawrenny Quay, once a busy inland port. The little village has a tall towered Church dedicated to St Caradog, Anthracite coal was exported from Cresswell Quay.

John Jones M.D in 1698 bequeathed certain lands and tenements for the relief of poor families and for apprenticing poor children of the parishes of Lawrenny, Cosheston, St David's and Lampeter Velvrey, now producing a considerable sum annually which is distributed in proportion to the number of deserving objects in the different parishes.

Henry Lort of Prickeston, brother of Sir Roger Lort of Stackpole, was Sheriff in 1653; his grandson, John, in 1723, and his great-grandson, John, in 1775. This last John married Dorothy, daughter of John Barlow of Lawrenny, and from the marriage of their daughter Elizabeth with Dr. George Phillips of Haverfordwest come the present family of Lort-Phillips at Lawrenny. The younger sister of Elizabeth, Anne Lort, married John Meares of Eastington, who was Sheriff in 1800.

Llanychaer (Treletert)

Llanychaer, a village and a parish in Haverfordwest district, Pembroke. The village stands on a branch of the river Cleddan 7 miles NW by N of Clarbeston road r. station, and 9 N by W of Haverfordwest; and has a post office under Haverfordwest. The parish comprises 2,216 acres. Real property, £1,440. Pop., 511. Houses, 120. The property is much subdivided. The manor belonged anciently to the Lettards. Heathfield Lodge is a chief residence. The living is a rectory, united with the p. curacy of Llanfair-Naut-y-Gof, in the diocese of St Davids. Value, £387., Patron, the Lord Chancellor. The Church is good, and contains an effigies of a Lettard.

Strip village, aligned generally east-west, home to a number of sites including Parc moat barrow , Pen dre barrow and Saron Chapel. The village sits within an extensive surviving open field (strip) system with probable medieval origins. Well preserved, fossilised, Medieval open-field strips to north, south and east of village. Recorded on RCAHMW aerial photographs.

T. Driver, RCAHMW, 15th September 2009.

A long village (with its axis running across the A40) to the north of Haverfordwest. Once a Norman manor ruled by one Letard, by all accounts a very unpleasant Fleming. The village is very similar in form to Cosheston in the south. At one time an important cattle Market, Llanychaer owes most of its growth to the railway era, with the junction of Pembrokeshire's two Fishguard lines just to the north of the village.

Letterson Lettardston or Llanychaer 1839 Lewis

LETTERSON, LETTARDSTON, or Llanychaer, a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Dewisland, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 10 miles (N.) from Haverfordwest; containing 498 inhabitants. This place derived its name from the family of Lettard, to whom the parish anciently belonged, and who gave the advowson of the living to the commandery of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem which had been founded at Slebech, in this county. The parish is situated in the north-western part of the county, and intersected by the turnpike-road from Haverfordwest to Fishguard. It comprises 2219 acres, of which 263 are common or waste land. The surrounding scenery is pleasing, and in certain places somewhat picturesque; the distant views embrace an extensive tract of finely diversified and richly cultivated country. In the vicinity are some handsome seats and pleasing villas, and within the parish is Heathfield Lodge. The living is a discharged rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Llanvair-Nant-y-Gove annexed, rated in the King's Books at £12. 11. 0½., and in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor; present net income, £387. The tithes of Letterson have been commuted for a rent-charge of £150, and there is a glebe of twenty-seven acres, valued at £27 per annum; also a glebe-house. The Church, dedicated to St. Giles, is not remarkable for any striking architectural features. The rectory-house was lately rebuilt by the incumbent, under the provisions of Gilbert's act of parliament, and is a handsome edifice. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans, a day school, and two Sunday schools. On a common near the road are several tumuli, supposed to be sepulchral.

In 1594 the Church was in the hands of the Crown. - (Owen's Pem.)

Described as Ecclesia de Villa Becard, no doubt a mistake for "Letard," this Church was in 1291 assessed at £14 13s. 4d. for tenths to the King, the amount payable being £1 8s. 4d. - (Taxatio.)

The old Church [of Llanychaer] was situated about three-quarters of a mile from the one now in use. site is at present occupied by a farm house, known as Hen Eglwys. - (Arch. Camb., Ser. V., Vol.XV., p. 185.)

The Parish Church Dedicated to St Giles --RCAM 1923

The present Church was erected in 1881, taking the place of one "not remarkable for any striking architectural features" (Lewis Top Dict) which had been built about the year 1844. It consisted of nave, chancel, and north porch; a Bell-cote over the western gable. In the south wall of the porch is fixed a pisina. Above the bowl is a cross 22 in long 12 in, the stem and arms are treated heraldically in the manner known as ragule. It may date from the 15th century. It is said to have been placed in the south wall of the earlier chancel.

The font bowl is hexagonal, the basin being circular 15 ½ in diameter. It has been much damaged and restored and has had a cover. The lower part of the bowl is scalloped, giving the idea of a 15th century copy of earlier ornament. Close to the font is a much worn effiegy of a female which in Fenton's day was inserted "in the chancel wall of the humble edifice" It is probably of late 14th or early 15th century date. visited 16th June 1915

The State of Education in Wales 1847

An agricultural parish, labourers receive 1s to 1s 2d a day on their own finding and 6d to 8d a day with food. There is a resident Clergyman but no resident land proprietor although Mr C Matthias of Lamphey Court does make a contribution.

Village School

This schoolroom is large enough for the neighbourhood. There are only one desk and four benches in the schoolroom.

The principal supporter of the school is Charles Matthias esq., of Lamphey Court near Pembroke who pays £6 a year for teaching poor children of the parish.

The master spoke English tolerably well. He had been a prisoner in France for nine years, and while a prisoner he acquired such information as he possesses.

The scholars are farmers, mechanics, and labourers children.

The master said that a great many parishioners are too poor to pay the smallest sum for their children's education. January 14th 1847. Wm Morris Assistant.

He migrated to Exeter College in 1694 , but there is no record of graduation. On 1 Dec. 1709 he became rector of Puncheston with Llanychaer, Pems. , but it would seem that he had previously been curate there, for in Nov. 1707 he was keeping school at Llanychaer. William Gambold 's wife was Elizabeth , it is said that she was of the neighbouring parish of Llanychaer but her surname is not known. He had five children John the eldest born 1711, William born. 1712 or 1713 Hector born 1714 the third son, George and Martha. Jones John 1834-1887 , Baptist minister and author, born at Llanychaere, Pembrokeshire, manifested at an early age a taste for preaching, and when delivering his trial sermon at Caersalem, Dowlais, gave unmistakeable evidence of his subsequent powers. He went from Dowlais to Haverfordwest College, and in 1858 took charge of the Church at Llanuwchllyn and the newly- formed Church at Bala. After remaining there about four years, he became pastor of the churches at Brymbo and Moss, near Wrexham, where he laboured with signal success for eight years. Castle Bucket Defended Enclosure 1 mile NNW of Llanychaer.

This is the remains of a defended hill slope enclosure. It consists of a circular bank with traces of two short banks extending northwards – probably the remains of an annex. There is no sign of an outer ditch, and the interior has been two severely ploughed for there to be any upstanding remains of huts. It has been suggested that this may not have been a defensive site but the remains of an earlier prehistoric ritual site.

The Pendre Tumuli

Fenton alluding to these tumuli says :-

On an open common skirting the road exactly opposite to this village, there are two tumuli, and another, the largest, just within an enclosure, on the edge of it to the right; on the left side of the common there were, till within these few years, in an enclosed field, three upright stones (Meini Hiion, placed triangularly and bedded in a pavement, perhaps with reference to the three neighbouring tumuli as if here the heroes in them might have fallen. One of these stones has been removed for a gate post and the other two overturned, the largest about 10ft long (tour p340) The tumuli stand in an almost exact north and south line, with about 100yds between each; they are bisected by the high road. The second mound is rather larger than its fellows. It has been slightly dug into from the summit, but with no apparent result. Of the upright stones mentioned by Fenton, there are no indications, nor any tradition of their removal. They appear to have stood about 600yds directly east of the mounds. The field immediately to the north of the tumuli is called “Parc cerrig hirion” doubtless with reference to the monoliths –visited 20th October 1914.

Llanychaer I Barrow RCAHMW

One of 3/4 barrows in a linear cemetery, this was, c.22.5m in diameter and 1.2m high, excavated 1806 & 1946, an urn having been reported here earlier. The 1946 excavation revealed the postholes of a somewhat irregular palisade c.18m in diameter, a feature off-centre within being described as a 'fire hole'.

The mound has been built upon and no trace is said to remain. RCAHMW J.Wiles 26.09.03

Llanychaer II Barrow RCAHMW

One of three or four barrows arranged as a linear cemetery, this was a mound c.65' in diameter and 6' high, with a central depression 16' in diameter.

Excavation in 1946 revealed a palisade 52-3' in diameter, with a near central urn cremation in a slab-lined pit. Three secondary urn cremations were also found, two within cists, the other accompanied by a pigmy cup.

Reported as built upon, with no trace remaining.

RCAHMW J.Wiles 07.05.02

Llanychaer III Barrow RCAHMW

One of 3/4 barrows, this monument, c.33m in diameter and c.1.5m high was excavated in 1961. The earliest feature was an embanked stone circle, 12m diameter internal diameter, over which was raised a kerbed barrow, c.31.5m in diameter. An urn and cremation & a shallow pit containing charcoal, were associated with the embanked circle.

The barrow was last reported as being, 'so mutilated that it is virtually destroyed' (1966). No trace of this feature visible on AP

Parc moat

A mound standing at the south east corner of the village Green in a field known as Parc moat. Its base circumference is about 300ft, and its present height 4 ft. The mound has been much disturbed within living memory especially on its southern slope, and its substance used for land leveling.

Lieut Colonel W.Ll. Morgan F.S.A., suggests that this work may have been “an intermediate stage between the motte and a ringed entrenchment'. It is close to the Church.

There can be little doubt that it represents an earthen motte-Castle in the last stages of decay – visited 16th June 1915.

Parc moat Mound RCAHMW

A mutilated and partly ditched, steep sided, flat-topped mound, 18m in diameter and 1.8m high. The site has been interpreted both as a Castle mound, or ringwork, and as a round barrow. As a barrow it is compared with others recorded nearby, however these are not ditched. Possibly a multi-period site. J.Wiles 07.05.2002

Little Newcastle

1895 Nooks And Corners Of Pembrokeshire Timmins

Little Newcastle, a mean, unkempt village, presenting few attractions for the wayfarer. At Little Newcastle was born a certain Bartholomew Roberts, who, about a century ago, made some noise in the world as a successful filibuster. In company with his fellow-countryman Howel Davies, as big a rascal as himself), this notorious freebooter sailed the high seas arrayed in priceless silks and jewels galore — as pretty a pair of desperadoes as ever hoisted the skull-and-crossbones flag, or Graced the yardarm of a man-o'-war.

1839 Little Newcastle Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis

Newcastle (LITTLE), a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Kemmes, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 8½ miles (N. by E.) from Haverfordwest; contains 431 inhabitants. It derives its name from an ancient mound near the Church, called "the Castle," and its distinguishing epithet of Little from the inferiority of this fortification to a much older and more extensive work of the same kind, at a short distance from the village. The parish comprises a moderate tract of land, by far the greater part inclosed and cultivated, the remainder being stony, barren, and unfit for tillage, especially the northern portion of it, which is hilly. Fairs are held in the village on May 6th and July 10th. The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant; net income, £54; patron, T. Morse, esq.; impropriator, the Rev. T. K. W. Harries. The Church is dedicated to St. Peter. A Church Sunday school is held; and there is a place of worship for Baptists, with a Sunday school held in it. Near the village is a spring designated Golden Well, which ebbs and flows regularly with the tide in St. George's Channel, nine miles distant; the water is said to be efficacious in coughs, and in diseases of the eye.

The Parish Church Dedicated to St David? RCAM

This Church was entirely rebuilt in 1870. The original font has been redressed. It is octagonal in shape; the diameter 22 inches, that of the circular basin 17 ins. It has been covered, marks of the hinge being visible – visited 28th October 1914

NB According to Dugdale in the grant to Pille Priory the Church is described as dedicated to St David

The Parish Church dedicated to St Peter?

Church on ancient foundations but has been completely rebuilt and lacks old features.

According to Richard Davies "Nineteenth Century Church Reconstruction" Journal of the Pembrokeshire Historical Society Vol 6 1994/5

The ecclesiastical history probably dates back to the Celtic period but the first definite records appear at the end of the 12th century. The medieval Church of that time probably consisted of a nave, chancel and north aisle. Later the north aisle became ruinous and so the north arcade blocked off just leaving the nave and the chancel. In 1811 Fenton described the Church as being of the very meanest fashion although repairs had been carried out in 1807. This may have been when the north aisle was partly re-erected. By 1835, when the Rev Peter Davies Richardson was appointed Perpetual curate, the Church was in a "thorough dilapidated state" It would appear the materials used in the 1807 refurbishment were "of bad quality." The total seating capacity of the Church was 35.

Rebuilding work started in August 1842 with the parishioners, while it was going on, having to go the Church at St Dogwells, but the money ran out. Work had been started without the plans being submitted to the Incorporate Churches Building Society so the Church technically did not qualify for a grant but, even so, the building was largely completed by 1843 and reopened on the 12th May. According to the form the Rev Richardson filled in the Church "excluding chancel was 32 feet long 30 ft wide and 12 ft high inside. It had no gallery, no tower and no spire but it had a Bell-cote". The door was almost in the middle of the north wall and flanked by two windows directly opposite the present churchyard gate. The pulpit was against the south wall with a reading desk flanked by two windows.

By 1870 the Church was again in a dilapidated estate and had to a comprehensive restoration which completely altered the appearance of the building.

Little Newcastle (S. David)— An Elizabethan Chalice with Paten cover measuring in height 6 in. and 1 in. respectively. The only Mark found is SSS' cover is inscribed the date " 1577 ". The shape and ornamentation correspond exactly with the Amroth examples. Within the lower band on the bowl is inscribed "- POCVLVM « ECLESIE « DE * NEWCASTELL ". The Paten cover is 3 in. in diameter. Both pieces are in a beautiful state of preservation.

Nonconformist Chapels:

Beulah [Baptists, 1808]. Built 1808, rebuilt 1874 & 1887, restored 1910. Still open 1998. Beulah Baptist Chapel is located around 1/3rd of a mile outside the village of Little Newcastle where Baptists are recorded as early as 1697. The original aim for the congregation was for a modest building, but John Evans of Rynaston persuaded them to go for a more ambitious structure, and played a prominent part in raising the necessary funds. Dying before the work was completed, his mantle was taken on by a Mrs Martha Griffiths of Wolfscastle who paid for the erection of the gallery.

The first Chapel was completed in 1808, the opening sermon preached on Easter Monday. This was built in the long-wall form. The Church was incorporated in 1823 with 135 members released from Llangloffan. It was rebuilt in 1874, and again in 1887 and restored in 1910. This was major reconstruction work carried out by the architects G Morgan & Son of Carmarthen and builder Daniel Thomas, and was due to the efforts of the minister Jacob John. Baptisms took place in the nearby River Angof. In the early 20th century the Chapel went into decline and had to rejoin with Smyrna in 1927. In May 2014 there was only 1 member and the Chapel due to close in the very near future.

The current Chapel is of stone, built on the gable entry plan type in the Arts and Crafts Style. The façade has a hooded door inscribed "1808 BEULAH 1910" above which is a stepped, flat-headed tripartite window containing small panes of leaded green glass. Side elevations are lit by two storeys of flat-headed windows.

The interior contains a small vestibule with a leaded glass window containing leaded coloured glass in Art Nouveau motifs, and two doors with leaded glass panels and lights above through to the main interior. This has a simple platform pulpit behind which is a match boarded pulpit arch with a winged pediment surmounting it. The seditious, pews and gallery front are similarly simple in their use of match boarded panelling. The gallery pews are raked, being only two levels of pews to the sides and five to the rear.

Pembrokeshire Parsons.

This benefice was granted by Adam de Rupe to Pill Priory, and in the grant it is described as the Church of St David of Newcastle, but in parochiale wallicanum it is ascribed to St. Peter. Its annual value including the glebe was in 1535-6 stated to be £40 - (Valor Ecc.)

In 1594 it was in the hands of the Crown as being part of the possessions of that priory. - (Owen's Pem.)

In 1536 the rectory of Newcastle and Rupe [Roch] was leased to Edward Lloid of the Household for 21years. - (State Papers.)

The tithes of Little Newcastle were in 1645 owned by Sir John Stepney of Prendergast, Pems. Bart. who was MP., for Haverfordwest in 1640. Sir John had been taken prisoner at the capture of Hereford in December 1645 by Col. Birch, the parliamentary commander and was imprisoned in the Compter, Southwark. Sir John alleged that he had not been in arms against the Commonwealth but had arrived in Hereford three week before his capture, and was waiting there for a pass from the wife of Major General Laugharne. This defense however proved of little avail, and Sir John was fined £1230.

On 31 May, 1649, the inhabitants of Newcastle in Kemes petitioned the Commonwealth for an augmentation for their minister, their maintenance being only £4 a year, so that they could not procure any godly and able minister to reside amongst them. Sir John Stepney held the tithes, which were worth £20 on 18 June 1649, Sir John's fine was reduced to £530 provided he settled £70 yearly on certain rectories. - (Compound. Papers.)

On 13 Jan., 1845, the benefices of Little Newcastle and St. Dogwells were united under an Order in Council.

On 8 September., 1870, plans for the rebuilding of the Church of Little Newcastle were approved by the Chapter. - (Chapter Acts.)

Barti Ddu --Little Newcastle

An extract from "The Maritime Heritage of Dyfed". National Museum of Wales ISBN 0 7200 0268 0

" The smuggling activities of the men of New Quay and Penbryn pale into insignificance however when compared with the exploits of Dyfed's most famous pirate - Barti Ddu or Black Bart.

Born in 1682 in the village, Bartholemew Roberts was perhaps one of the most successful pirates of all time, and is reputed to have been first to hoist the Skull and Crossbones flag, universally recognised as the dreaded Hall-Mark of pirate vessels.

He first went to sea at the age of thirteen, serving in naval vessels during the war of the Spanish Succession, and after a number of years on board slaving vessels, he joined the crew of the Royal Rover, a pirate vessel in 1719. Within a few months, the captain of this vessel was killed in an engagement, and such was the esteem with which the crew already regarded Roberts, that he was made captain. Within a short period of time he sailed down to Brazil, and in the sight of forty Portugese men o'war, captured the prize vessel, Sagrada Familia, bearing a cargo worth about two and a half million pounds in present day terms.

This was to be the first in a series of daring raids and actions that returned a fortune in excess of eighty million pounds for Roberts and his crew by 1721. Despite his fierce reputation, Bartholomew Roberts had a number of beliefs and habits not usually associated with the accepted image of a pirate captain. He was a strict tee-totaller and Sabbatarian, and allowed no gambling nor prostitution on board his vessels. When engaging his intended prize, he appeared on deck dressed in a crimson coat and breeches to the accompaniment of a band that sailed everywhere with him.

This flamboyant character ultimately met his end however off St Lopez in January 1722, where he was confronted by H.M.S. Swallow commanded by Captain Chaloner Ogle. Ogle, who had been given a particular commission to seek out and destroy pirate vessels, hoisted the flag of a Portugese merchantman, and Roberts moved in for the prize. As he came alongside, Ogle opened fire, and the pirate captain, conspicuous in all his finery, was killed in the first exchange. His crew, utterly demoralised by the death of their captain, surrendered, and many were later hanged.

So ended Black Barty's life as a pirate, a life that he is said to have described as he lay dying a '..... a merry life, and a short one' " [Pat Sewell 19.4.2000 D]

The Parish of Little Newcastle –Mrs Bevans School. The Rev. P D Richardson Curate, pays for the cottage in which this school is held. It is in good repair, and there are plenty of benches, but no desks, except planks lent by the farmers, which are used as desks. The room is far too small to accommodate the scholars. The Rev. Mr Richardson spoke very highly of the master. The school has been the means of doing much good already. The scholars are the children of farmers, mechanics and labourers. The school was closed for the holidays, and would not reopen for a fortnight. The master was from home. January 11th 1847 Wm Morris Assistant.

Colston Cromlechau

About ½ mile south east of Little Newcastle village on the farm of Ffynnonau is a small but perfect cromlech, and on its south side the ruined remains of a second. The first cromlech is separated from the road to Beulah bridge by a fence which is carried over the mound on which the stones are placed. The capstone measuring 82 in by 75 in with a thickness of 37 in, is supported on three short stone pillars. The structure stands east and west. The stones of the second cromlech were broken up about the year 1815. This is said to have had a “room under it”. Endeavours were made to remove the ring of stones around the cromlechs; a sufficient number yet remain to show that the mound had a base circumference of some 350ft. About 50 yds due south of the cromlechs is a pointed stone standing 40 in above ground, which may have been connected with them. The existing cromlech is usually spoken of as “the Altar” – visited 28th October 1914.

Castell Pentre

A semi circular enclosure 500 yds south east of Pentre farmhouse, and half a mile north west of Little Newcastle village; the high road forms the chord of the arc. The rampart 400ft in length, is best preserved on the north side where its height is 6ft, with a fall of 10ft to a 10ft ditch. The interior is level. To the south of the existing rampart and closely adjoining it, is a strong spring, with a slightly sunken trackway leading from enclosure. On the further side of the road are traces which suggest the possibility of this having been a circular work.-- visited 30th October

Summerton Camp

The following account is by Lieut.- Colonel W.Ll. Morgan R.E., F.S.A.,

“ This work is one of the most difficult to classify, as either it has been much destroyed, or else the defenses when at their best must have been of the most feeble description. It consists of an oval enclosure and circular keep, situated on the mountain side, with the ground sloping upwards to the north, and protected to some extent by a steep slope to the south. The outer enclosure is 310ft by 250 ft, and a rampart to the north against the Hill is 7ft high with a 10ft fall to a ditch 5ft deep. To the south it is 2ft high, with 7ft fall to a ditch 2ft deep. The inner enclosure or keep is 120ft in diameter; the rampart is 3ft with 6ft fall to a ditch 4ft deep; the inner rampart to the north is thus 4ft lower than the outer. An entrance for both is to the east, and the outer enclosure has a further entrance to the west leaving a terrace between the two enclosures.”

Although possessing many of the features of a Romano-British earth work, this camp is probably of Norman origin, and its wooden defences having decayed, the earthen foundations of the keep are all that remains of a once formidable work – visited 30th October 1914

New Castle

In the centre of the village adjoining the parish Church is a mound which has been much tampered with. It is grassgrown, and its surface is somewhat irregular. The summit diameter varies from about 150ft from east to west to about 100ft from north to south. The height is about 10ft. The ditch is obliterated. The dry summer of 1914 revealed signs of stone foundations beneath the soil. To the west of the mound are indications of the Bailey, too faint to permit of further description. In close proximity to the work is a strong spring. This is doubtless the site of the New Castle built in the 12 century by Adam de Rupe – visited 28th October 1914.

Ffynnon Olden

A never failing spring about 500 yds north west of the village; the water was formerly in repute for certain infantile ailments, but no traditions exist which exhibit it as a sacred well. The name by which it is known is probably that of a former owner or occupier of the site – visited 30th October 1914

Parc Castell

Two fields about one third of a mile north of Castell Pentre. The reason for the name is not apparent, there being nothing in the nature of an earthwork –visited 30th October 1914

Llandewi Velvrey a parish principally in the hundred of Narberth but partly in that of Dungledy county of Pembroke 2 mile ENE from Narberth, containing 710 inhabitants. This place is situated in a rich and fertile valley watered by the river Taf which separates the parish from that of Llangan in the county of Carmarthen. The lands are wholly enclosed and in a good state of cultivation and the soil is eminently fertile. The neighbourhood abounds with pleasing and interesting scenery and is enlivened with several gentleman's seats of which the principal are Trewern, the residence of John Thomas Benyon esq. and Henllan the seat of John Lewis esq.. The living consists of a rectory and a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Carmarthen and diocese of St David's; the former , which is a sinecure is rated in th King's Books at £8 and in the patronage of the Principal and Tutors of St David's College Lampeter; the vicarage which is discharged is rated at £7 9 4 1/2d., in the patronage of the crown; the tithes of the entire parish are equally divided between rector and vicar. The Church dedicated to St David is remarkable for the simplicity of its architecture and displays evident features of very remote antiquity; an elegant mural tablet of white marble to the memory of the late David Lewis esq., of Henllan and his youngest daughter has lately been put up in the chancel by his widow. The vicarage house has been nearly rebuilt on an enlarged scale by the present incumbent, under the provisions of an act of parliament commonly called the Gilbert Act. A school house built at the expense of the parish in 1828 is at present occupied by one of Mrs Bevan's circulating charity schools. The average annual expenditure of the poor amounts to £331 3s.,.

Henllan

a hamlet forming that part of the parish of Llandewi- Velvrey which is in the hundred of Dungledy, county of Pembroke 2 miles NE from Narberth, containing 39 inhabitants. It appears to have taken its name signifying "the old Church" from a Chapel of ease which according to tradition, originally existed here. A considerable portion of the land within its limits, called "Bishop's land" is tithe free; and it is not improbable that, being in a detached portion of the hundred of Dungledy, entirely surrounded by that of Narberth, it was originally wholly held by the Bishop and that the occupiers of it did service at Lawhaden, the principal residence of the Bishop's of St David's. The seat of John Lewis esq. bearing the same name as the hamlet is pleasantly situated on an eminence within its limits. There are no remains of the ancient Chapel; but there is a place of worship for Baptists. In this part of the parish are two ancient British encampments, one called Cyra probably a corruption of Caerau, the other Pen Y Gaer, but no particulars of their history have been recorded. Within the last few years, a pot of silver coins was dug up on a farm in this hamlet, but being sold immediately on their discovery, no particular account of them has been preserved. The inhabitants are assessed for the repair of their own roads, but do not separately support their poor.

Llan Ddewi Welffri

“The Church & Chancell want rendring, the windows glazing, & the floor to be made plain. There are wanting an English Bible, a book of Canons, Homilies & Table of degrees. The Fence of the Church-yard to be repair'd. The Minister says that half an Acre of the Glebe has been lately taken from him against all right & without any previous proceedings at Law by Mr John Lewis, & that this was in the possession of the Vicar of Llan Ddewi Welffri till this present year 1710. Five pounds was left to the Poor of the Parish by Dr Hensent the late Rector, but the mony was never paid. The Minister says that 'tis reported that twas once in the hands of Mr Meyrick of Carmarthen. The Minister is resident. The Vicarage is in value about £20 besides the Glebe. The Rectory is worth about £20 . With the Vicarage he holds Llan Fallteg & Crino, this last is held by sequestration. In this Church there are every month two Sermons, one in Welsh the other in English. There are in the Parish two Families of Dissenters, one of Quakers, another of Anabaptists. The Sacrament is administred there three times a year. At Easter the Minister is at the charge of Bread & wine. At Easter there are about 30 Communicants . About 60 Families in the Parish. There were neither Minister nor Clark nor Churchwardens to be found when I visited Crino & Llan y Bydder.”

The Parish Church dedicated to St David. RCAM.

The Church has been practically rebuilt on the earlier foundations. It comprises chancel 26 ½ ft by 16ft, nave 35ft by 18ft, Chapel 23ft by 11 ft on the north side of the chancel, with the east wall of which it aligns, south porch, and double Bell-cote above the west gable. Between the chancel and its Chapel is an arcade of two bays, the intermediate pier bearing a plain cable molding. On the south wall of the Chapel is a projecting corbel with two grotesque masks. The plain font is 22in by 20in, and the basin 16 ½ in by 16 in; the base has been restored. It bears no feature to Mark its date, but its massive size and square shape proclaim it is Norman.

This benefice comprises a sinecure rectory and a vicarage. Formerly the two incumbents were called portioners on account of the fruits of the living being shared, although not equally between them. The patronage of the two portioners appears to have belonged to the Lord of Narberth.

Described as Ecclesia de Landewy and Tresendek, this Church was assessed in 1291 for tenths to the King at £8.— Taxatio.

Whether Tresendek was a distinct Church annexed to Landewy is an undecided question, but if it was a separate Church, the suggestion made by the editor of Owen's Pem. that Tresendek is possibly Egremont, is probably correct.

Llandewi Velfrey village School

This school is held in a schoolroom erected many years ago at the expense of the parish on glebe land. The roof is too low. The furniture consists of one table for the master, four desks, and nine benches, and the room is kept remarkably clean. It is used on Sunday to hold the Church Sunday school and also for one evening in the week to teach singing. The day school is wholly supported by subscriptions. The scholars pay nothing. They learn the Church catechism and attend Church on Sunday regularly. The master is not very well acquainted with English. He expressed himself anxious to go to a training establishment. He has a wife and five children. The scholars were mostly labourers children and are better acquainted with Welsh than English

Ffynnon Day school

– I visited this school on the 8th December. The schoolroom is built over the Chapel stable. It is a rude but not incommensurable building. On the day of my visit I found it comfortably warmed by a good fire and in a tidy state. There was a heap of fuel in one corner, and as usual, the biers of the Chapel were laid across the beams of the roof. The length of the room compared with its height and the windows being small and all one side must make it close in summer. The nearest school is in the Llandewi day school two miles off. All the children speak Welsh at home. Most of them are labourers children. Wages are not more than 3s per week and food. I heard the first class read from the 12th chapter of the second book of Samuel.

Ffynnon Sunday School

– on the 13th December I visited the above school. It was held in Ffynnon Chapel. The premises and furniture were in good repair. There was no fire in the Chapel, though the day was intensely cold. There were no books of attendance kept neither had there been a fixed superintendent for the last 12 months. The discipline of the school was superintended by the teachers co-jointly. There were only 16 present, chiefly adults. I was told by one of the teachers that the children who lived at any considerable distance from the main road could not attend, as the snow was too deep on the fields for them to walk through. A class of four boys who were reading the Testament in Welsh read pretty correctly. The teacher did not question them on what they read. The other class was composed of three girls who were reading the 15th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles in Welsh. They read very well. The other class was composed of adults. There seemed to be a great lack of teachers I only saw one man present who took any interest whatever in the children.

Cy Gaer RCAM

A fine promontary camp placed 200yds north of the parish Church. It is naturally protected on the east and south by steep slopes to a narrow dingle below it. The promontory faces west and across it is drawn a triple line of strong ramparts and well formed ditches. These banks are best seen on the northwards side of the camp; they gradually die away as they reach the increasingly steep slope of the eastern side. The banks are about 100yds long and 90 ft apart; the ramparts, which are well preserved, rise about 20ft above the ditches. The hillside to the south has been scarped for a distance of 100yds; along it on a very steep incline, and cutting through an outcrop of rock on its way, passes a road or trackway. The original entrance to the enclosure was at the northeast end of the banks, and had apparently a width of 20 ft. the enclosed space, west to east measures 280 ft with a breadth from north to south of 350ft In 1910 an iron Cannon ball 9 ½ in in circumference, was found on the site – visited 1st July 1915

Caerau Gaer RCAM

This is an irregular circular enclosure on the farm of Caerau 500 yds directly west of Y Gaer, from the highest point of which it is everywhere overlooked. The diameter of the enclosed area is about 300ft, the surface being fairly level, with a slight slope to the east at the end of a low spur. The rampart, composed of earth intermixed with small stone, is seen at its best to the north and east, where it has a height of 10ft with a 12ft fall to the ditch, which is Throughout slight and shallow. The chief entrance was probably on the east, in full view from the other camp. A break in the western bank may be of modern construction. It may be inferred that Caerau Gaer was probably an annex to the adjacent strong camp of Y Gaer, and may have been devoted to the hearing of the tribal cattle. A neolithic axe-head with a sharp cutting edge, was found here in 1816; it is now in the Tenby Museum.-- visited 1st July 1915.

Castell Gwyndy RCAM

This enclosure is situated about 500yds to the southeast of Castell farmhouse, and the same distance northwest of Gwyndy fach, the local name of the site being Castell Gwyndy. It is placed on a spur of land, the defence to the north, south and east being the steep descents to a valley, through which runs a small stream. In places the slopes show clear signs of scarping, but there are no traces of a marginal bank. Across the root of the tongue of land is thrown a well preserved rampart, which extends westward for about 2500ft. The bank rises to a height of 6ft and a counter-scarp of 4ft. The entrance, which has been widened, was at the northern end of the bank. The enclosed area 360ft from east to west and 150ft north to south, is fairly level. Cultivation has removed all signs of hut circles, which are said to have existed here. – visited 25th May 1915

Henllan RCAM

Browne Willis mentions a Chapel at Henllan, dedicated to St Teilo, as being subordinate to Llanddewi Velfrey. The hamlet of Henllan was formerly a detached portion of the hundred of Dungledy, and appears also to have been known as Trefeandeg. The present house of Henllan is modern – visited 1st July 1915

Ffynnon Claf RCAM

A well on Dyffryn farm, almost completely hidden beneath the permanent way of the Pembroke and Tenby railway. It gives its name to Ffynnon Claf Bridge and adjoining cottages. "Sick folk used to drink at this well. The patron has been forgotten" (Pem Arch Survey) – visited 1st July 1915.

Ffynnon Dewi RCAM

The name of a field, half a mile west of the Parish Church. The spring has ceased to flow, and no traditions could be gleaned in connection with the spot ;-- visited 1st July 1915.

Parc yr eglwys RCAM

A field that probably once formed part of the parochial glebe. The name is still in vogue – visited 1st July 1915

Parc groes wen RCAM

This is a field on the farm of Llandybie about half a mile south west of the parish Church. It is possibly the site of a medieval wayside cross visited 1st July 1915.

Friends Burial Ground Trewern RCAM

Situated in the north east of the parish about 300yds west of Trewern House. It was formerly the property of John Lewis, a Friend, who resided at Trewern. In the year 1876 the last survivor of this family presented the burial ground and an adjoining cottage, known as Machpelah, to the Society of Friends. The Friends Meeting house of Redstone was in the adjoining parish of Narberth. The enclosure 34ft by 39ft is surrounded by a wall which divides it from Machpelah garden. An iron gate carries a modern plate inscribed “FRIENDS BURIAL GRUOND”1663. Interments have been made within living memory (Transactions, Friends Hist. Soc., II 45) – visited 29th May 1915.

Neolithic Celt RCAM

A stone celt found on the Henllan demesne is now in the Tenby Museum. It has a length of 8in, width at its cutting edge of 4in and is highly polished. - Seen 7th May 1914.

Roman coins RCAM

In a letter of 1693 addressed to Edward Lhuyd (Bodl. Ashmole, 1815 f307) mention is made of the discovery in this parish of two pots of coins of “Julius Ceasar, Augustus, Vespasian, and others.”

Llandeilo Llwydarth, St Teilo's Skull

St Teilo's Skull

The receptacle from which the water is drunk is a human skull – the reputed skull of St Teilo, in Welsh called “Penglog Teilo” of which the representative of the Melchior family residing at the farm is the hereditary keeper. To ensure the full benefit of the water the skull must be completely filled and the vessel offered to the pilgrim only by the senior living member of that family. The cranium is evidently old and is polished from constant handling. A part of the superciliary ridge remains and this is of a slight elevation as to make it almost certain that the skull is that of a female, while the open sutures point to the same conclusion.

Until well within recent years the skull was in constant requisition. Most of the votaries were sufferers from tuberculosis; but many visitors came to register pious vows, and in the early days of the recent war pilgrims visited the well to drink from the relic to a speedy termination of hostilities. The late Mrs Melchior, who died at a great age, remembered persons coming from Haverfordwest and more distant places. When as a child she herself suffered from whooping cough, she was taken to the well and made to drink out of the skull. There appears to be no doubt that the skull is a genuine pre-Reformation relic. --visited 21st September 1914.

According to information from Llandeilo Llwydiarth - The Well and the Skull by Kemmis Buckley MBE, DL, MA

For nearly five hundred and fifty years the skull of St Teilo was held in the keeping of two families, the Mathews and the Melchiors. In 1403 the tomb was pillaged and desecrated. Shortly after this Owen Glyndwr sacked both the Cathedral Church and the Bishops' Palace and the necessary work of restoration to the Saint's tomb was undertaken by Sir David Mathew presumably because his family had come to be thought of as its keepers. As a reward for this act of devotion, the Bishop gave Sir David the skull of the saint, set in a costly reliquary, to be an heirloom in his family

The reliquary remained in the hands of the Mathew family for seven generations until William Mathew died without issue at Llandeilo Llwydiarth in 1658. Before he died William handed the skull, by that time taken from its reliquary, to the Melchior family who owned Llandeilo farm; and it remained in their possession until this century. A few hundred yards from the farm is St Teilo's Well (Ffynnon Deilo). The water, which is bland to the palate, has recently been tested and found to be drinkable. In earlier times the overflow must have fallen into a pond, the outlines of which can still be seen.

The water was said to be particularly effective in the treatment of chest complaints and it was doubly so if it was drunk out of the skull. The height of efficacy came when the skull, filled with well water, was handed to the sufferer by the hands of the hereditary keeper himself.

The said skull of St Teilo is, I am informed, reputed to have been taken from St Teilo's Tomb in the fifteenth century by Bishop Marshall and to have been given by him to Sir David Mathew and to have remained in the Mathew family until the year 1658. It is reputed to have been kept in Llandeilo by one, William Mathew, a descendant and on his death that year to have been given into possession of the family of Melchior, to which family I belong. It has certainly been in the possession of the Melchior family for a very considerable period, and has been for eight years past in my possession and during the whole of my recollection at Llandeilo. It have been agreed to sell the said skull to Gregory Macalister Mathews descendant of the above named Sir David Mathew for the sum of £50. When he had received the skull Gregory Mathews had it examined by Sir Arthur Keith, Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, 'who pronounced it of undoubted antiquity, of Welsh origin and of a small man between fifty and sixty years of age' Having done this he had the relic set in a reliquary.

It is a curious fact that whereas the whereabouts of the skull were widely known from 1450 to the time Gregory Mathews acquired it in 1927, it became progressively more difficult to trace thereafter. This may well have been because Gregory Mathews and his son Alister both lived in England and their ties with Wales were loosened. When I began the search in 1991, the trail had gone completely cold and I began to think I would have to make inquiries in Australia as the relic might well have gone to the descendants of Gregory Mathews' brother who was mentioned in his will. In fact the skull had gone to Australia: Alister Mathews had died in 1985 but before this he had sent the relic to his cousins in New South Wales. This remarkable story ends when the present Dean of Llandaff, the Very Revd. John Rogers, rang me up in early February this year to say that Captain Robert Mathews, the Hereditary Keeper, would be coming from Hong Kong to present the skull to the Cathedral at Sung Eucharist on St Teilo's Day, 9 February 1994. The skull had come home for the first time since 1450.

At The service the Chancellor in his address told us that it would eventually be placed in a reliquary in St Teilo's Chapel.

LLandilo (Llandeilo)

1834 Acc/to the Topographical Dictionary of Wales - S. Lewis

LLandilo (Llan-Deilo), a parish in the hundred of Kemmes, county of Pembroke 11 miles N of Narberth containing 117 inhabitants. This parish, which is not of very great extent, is pleasantly situated in the eastern part of the county bordering on Carmarthenshire. It derives its name from dedication of its Church to St Teilo one of the most eminent saints of British antiquity who flourished in the latter part of the 5th and the beginning of the 6th c. The surface is boldly undulated and in some parts rises into abrupt eminences, among which are some of the highest summits of the Precelly range of Mountains. The lands are but partially enclosed and cultivated; and the soil is various being in some parts fertile and in others thin and poor. Slate of good quality is found in abundance within the parish; some quarries of it are worked with advantage, the produce consisting of roofing slates, which are in high estimation. The living is a perpetual curacy annexed to that of Llangolman in the archdeaconry and diocese of St David's and endowed with £800 royal bounty. There is a place of worship for Independents. The average annual expenditure for the support of the poor is £17 10s.

1847 The State of Education in Wales

There is no resident Clergy and the Church is down but there is a Perpetual Curate. It is an agricultural parish with labourers receiving 8d a day with food and 1s a day on their own finding. There is one resident land proprietor with no provision for education of the poor of which approximately 18 children are without any education. Many of the population can read but not write.

Information George Harries Perpetual Curate of LLandilo

Acc/to Pembrokeshire Parsons.

There appears to be no mention of this Church in the Valor Eccl.

George Owen, writing in 1594, states that it was a curacy appertaining to the vicarage of Maenclochog, which vicarage was then in the Queen's hands, as belonging to the Monastery [of St. Dogmaels] - (Owen's Pem.)

In 1536-7 a lease of the rectory of Llandeilo (lately owned by the abbey of St. Dogmaels) was granted for 21 years to John Leche of La Haddin (Lawhaden). - (State Papers.)

1765 Under the heading "Not in Charge":- Llandeilo Cur. (St. Teilaw). The Church down –united to Maenclochog. Hugh Boylen, clerk, 1765. - (Bacon's Liber Regis.)

The benefices of Llandeilo, Llangolman, and Maenclochog were united be an Order in Council, dated 11 July, 1877.

1898 The Church of Llandeilo is now in ruins, and has been in that state for over 70 years. In 1898 the walls of the nave were nearly gone; the chancel with part of the east wall was then standing, but in some places the walls were only 4ft. high or less. - (Arch. Camb., Ser. V. Vol. 15, p 277.)

1895 Nooks And Corners Of Pembrokeshire 1895 Timmins

Passing by Temple-Druid, the site of a now destroyed cromlech, we arrive at Llandilo, where we search in vain for the Church : for this sparsely-peopled parish has been merged into that of Maenclochog, in consequence of which the sacred edifice has been allowed to fall into disrepair, and is now represented by a few crumbling walls smothered in rank, untended ivy.

Crossing the stone stile that gives access to the churchyard, we espy upon its southern side a slab of greenstone bearing, in rudely-chased letters, the inscription: Coimagni fili caveti. A similar stone near the east end of the ruined chancel has also its superscription, which reads : ANDAGELli iacit ; with a fainter line, possibly fili CNOI, below ; and over all a cross with trident terminations.

The earliest incumbent of Llandeilo, of whom there is record, is William Rees, who held it and also Maenclochog in 1617.

1811 The following note appears in Llangolman Bishop Transcript 1811: "I hereby certify that there are no registers in the parish of Llandilo and that all were for these last twenty years entered in the register of the parish of Llangolman".

1929. St Teilo, Llandilo (in ruins) The Church was a ruin by 1930.

The Parish Church Dedicated to St Teilo

This Church has been deserted for nearly a century. It shows the ruins of a small building, comprising nave 18ft by 8 ½ ft chancel 14ft by 11ft and south door. The round-headed chancel arch still stands but ruin is fast overcoming it. It is 8ft high to the crown, 6ft wide and 2 ½ ft thick. round the nave there ran a low stone bench.

The ecclesiastical parish with that of Llangolman was united to Maenclochog by Order in Council of 11 July 1877.

Llandilo (S. Teilo). —Here is a Chalice and Paten cover of peculiar interest, bearing the Hall marks of 1639 and maker's Mark L.B with what appears to be a crescent beneath. Under the plain bowl which rests upon a trumpet-shaped stem and base, is a collar or flange. This form of cup was made in the reign of Edward VI and some examples are found in the early Elizabethan period. Its re-appearance between 1630 and 1640 when the popular pattern was the baluster stem or a modified Elizabethan shape is very remarkable. Mr. Wilfred Cripps thought that this resemblance was too marked to be accidental and gave it as his opinion that the silversmith who 'revived' the fashion must have been well acquainted with the work of the Edwardian and early Elizabethan Smiths. On the bowl of the Llandilo chalice is inscribed " Llandylo Parish " Height, 5 in.; diam. of bowl, 3 in.; depth, in.; The Paten cover which is quite plain has been roughly used; diam. 4in.; height, an in.; weight, 3 oz. 3 dwts. The inscription on the cup is here repeated.

Inscribed Stones with Roman Letters

Two incised stones which formerly stood in the churchyard have recently been erected on either side of the primitive wicker gate.

The taller stone stands 68 in above the soil. It bears in Roman letters the inscription ANDAGELL – IACIT FILI CAVETI, and in Ogam ANDAGELLI MACU CAVI. The head of the stone above the inscription, carries a Latin cross, the ends being forked.

The second stone stands 40 in above the soil. It has the simple inscription in Roman letters – COLMAGNI FILI CAVETI.

Unfortunately both stones have been so fixed as to be exposed to the full force of the prevailing winds and rain, and in consequence are weathering badly. It is much to be desired that they should be removed to a place of shelter and safety – visited 9th October 1914

Only the lower part of the walls of this remote Church now survive although it was roofed until early this century. In a brick pump house serving the nearby farm is St Teilo's well.. It was said to be the skull of the saint himself and has now vanished, (but see the Welsh Churchman May 1994 Page 4).

The waters were said to be effective as a cure only if drunk early in the morning out of part of the skull which was purchased by museum officials in 1950

St Teilo's Well

This is a strong and never failing spring which rises about 100yds north east of St Teilo's Church, on the farm owned and occupied for many generations by a family named Melchior. The well is a plain roughly constructed stone girt enclosure which, it is clear was never intended for the total immersion of adults. The overflow passes into a pond. There are no remains of early masonry at the well head. The water has a widespead reputation for the healing of pulmonary complaints , and still attracts pilgrims from far and near.

Llandeloy (LLAN-DYLWYF), a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Dewisland, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 7 miles (E. by N.) from St Davids; containing 205 inhabitants. This parish, which derives its name from the dedication of its Church, is pleasantly situated in the north-western part of the county. The living is a discharged vicarage, annexed to that of Llanhowel, rated in the King's Books at £5, and endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant; impropriators, the Dean and Chapter of St Davids. The impropriate tithes of Llandeloy have been commuted for a rent-charge of £71, and the vicarial tithes for one of £44. The Church, dedicated to St. Teilaw, presents no interesting architectural features. There is a Sunday school connected with the Independents, held in a farmhouse.

Pembrokeshire Parsons

Bishop David Martin, with the consent of his Chapter, appropriated the Church of Lannowell in Pebydiaul:, in his own donation, to the Chapter of St Davids, and in Feb., 1307, he also appropriated the Church of Landelowe in Pebydi-auk to the same Chapter, with the proviso that the Church was not to be deprived of its proper services. Stat. Menev.

It would seem, however, that the Bishop relied on Sir John Wogan of Picton Knt., to get the necessary permit from the King for this appropriation, and this was not obtained till 25 Mar., 1313, when the nature of the appropriation was so changed, as to render it almost certain that the original intention, which was to recompense the Chapter for an annual charge of £10 payable by the latter for the use of the Cathedral, had been altered in view of an arrangement whereby Sir John Wogan endowed a chantry in the Cathedral. — Stat. Menev.

On 25 Mar., 1313, licence was granted by the King to David Martin Bishop of St Davids, for the alienation in mort-main of the advowsons of the two churches to the Precentor and Chapter of St Davids Cathedral, and for the chapter to appropriate the same for the sustenance of three chaplains to celebrate divine service in the Cathedral for the King's soul and the souls of his ancestors and successors, and for the souls of William de Valence and John Wogan and their heirs, although in the case of a voidance to the see, the King might lose the presentation of Llandeloy.

"The roof of the Church which has for a long time been in a state of dilapidation now fallen in"
John Davies, Vicar, Haverfordwest

Royal Commission of Ancient Monuments The Parish Church 1920

The original Church has been in ruins for some 70 years; divine service ceased but in 1897 an iron Church was erected adjacent to the ruined Church. The earlier structure comprised a small nave, chancel arch of 54in in width, small chancel, and double Bell- cote above the west gable; two squints pierced the chancel wall. No architectural details or carved stones remain.

The broken font basin, a plain octagonal chamfered off to a circular shaft and square base, is stored in the disused schoolhouse at Cross Jack some distance from the Church.

In the burial ground to the north of the building is a good but ill kept well, which at one time was enclosed with masonry; a few stones are still scattered around –visited 27th April 1920

St Teilo's Church, Llandeloy RCAHMW

Has medieval origins, but rebuilt from ruins in 1926 by Cardiff architect J Coates Carter to the Arts and Crafts principles of making careful use of local materials. The Church has a long and low interior with exposed stone walls, cambered tie beams to roofs and scissor-rafters. There is a medieval, possibly C13, octagonal font with sides splayed in to chamfered base over circular shaft and simple open-back pews. A built out passage in the north wall gives access to the pulpit and to the rood stair. The pulpit is three-sided and simple in the angle to the screen, which is exceptionally fine with rood-loft and carved Crucifixion to front. Llandeloy's Holywell is in the churchyard. Architectural History of Llandeloy Church

Taken on by the Friends following its closure in 2002, St Eloi is a rare example of a surviving Arts and Crafts-influenced Church by the architect John Coates Carter. The Church was re-invented from fragmentary medieval ruins in 1926-7 and is characteristic of the architect's later work in its use of indigenous materials and identifiably Welsh vernacular motifs. The colourful reredos has recently been conserved by Perry Lithgow.

St Eloi's is a simple, two-cell, building with a humble exterior, but a beautiful and evocative interior. Adhering to SPAB (Society for the Protection of Ancient Buildings) conservation principles the architect has restored the building to a pre-Reformation framework.

The space is dominated by the splendid rood loft, carved screen and simple pulpit, all standing against the west face of the medieval screen wall. Both fonts are of stone; one is preserved in situ, being built up from a few ancient stones discovered during excavation, the other - an octagonal one

- stands on three rough steps that are for the most part medieval, described as 'perfect' when uncovered. There is a delightful stoup and two matching piscinas carved from grey slate. The reredos is one of a group of similar painted dossals that Coates Carter designed for churches in Pembrokeshire - a rectangular wooden panel, painted with gesso and coloured with tempera, in a moulded frame crowned with elaborately carved cresting which incorporates some of the architect's 'Hook' sub-cusping. In contrast to all this care and expense, the open-backed bench pews could scarcely be more humble, or more appropriate.

This Church lay in ruins from c1850 until the 1920's being temporarily superseded by an iron Church of 1897. A narrow arch of c1200 divides the nave and narrow chancel and the north doorway is roundheaded. The chancel south wall is thick enough to contain small rooms. There is a south transept with a low arch to the nave and a squint to the chancel. The former rood-loft staircase now gives access to the pulpit.

Sites of Interest Treffynnon Cromlech

This is a partly ruined structure standing conspicuously 400ft above sea level about 500 yds east of the hamlet of Treffynnon. It consists of a capstone 8 1/2/ft by 6ft now partially fallen and three massive suppoert boulders so arranged as to form the three sides of an enclosure or chamber 6ft by 5ft. The supports have an average height of 3ft. The grave lies open to the north side but there can be no doubt that it was originally closed in like the other sides. When perfect the exterior must have had the appearance of a low square chest. The interior has been filled with field gathered stones, which should be removed and the structure be carefully restored. Some years ago several flagstones were met with in the course of ploughing a few yards from the cromlech. There are no traces of a mound, but the field has been under cultivation probably for centuries. --visited 27th April 1921.

Llanvair Nant Y Gove (Llan-Fair-Nant-Y-Gôv) Topographical Dictionary of Wales 1839 Lewis

Llanvair-nant-y-gove (llanfair-nant-y-gôv), a parish, in the union of haverfordwest, partly in the hundred of Dewisland, and partly in that of Kemmes, county of Pembroke, south wales, 4 miles (s.) from fishguard; contains 237 inhabitants. It is pleasantly situated in the northern part of the county; and within its limits is Trecavn, the seat of the Rev. Charles Barham, who owns the greater portion of the soil. The living is annexed to the rectory of Letterson; the tithes have been commuted for a rent charge of £133, and the glebe consists of 164 acres, valued at £105 per annum. The Church is dedicated to St. Mary .

The Parish Church RCAM

The present Church is a modern structure dating from 1855. It consists of a nave, chancel, south transept and north porch. The font is modern. Its predecessor, now disused, has a basin (exterior 21 1/2in by 20in, interior 19 1/2 in square which chamfers off to a circular stem and base. It is doubtless the original Norman font, the Church having been appropriated to the preceptory of St. John of Jerusalem at Slebech under the title of the Church of Landegof in Pedydiaulk.

Llanfair Nant-Y-Gof Parish Church 1981

The Church was built by the Barhams about 150 years ago. Now sparsely attended and in need of repair. No incumbent as of October, 1984

This is the parish Church of the dispersed rural community that became better known as Trecwn, which is actually the name adopted by the RNAD establishment lower down in the valley where c20 housing has clustered. There is no actual settlement around the Church now, just scattered farms and cottages. It was probably always a dispersed community, with two large estates owning most of the land.

The Church is weak, with sparse congregations. There is no Vicar at present. Support for the Church is almost wholly English and incoming or foreign.

With the closing of the depot there only remain the farms, the school , the Chapel and the Church, the post office and shop, and a few private houses within the parish in a predominately rural area Previously both of the small housing estates primarily cater for the Depot, and one was the actual property of the Ministry of Defence. These estates only contain rented property.

2011 The present St. Mary's Church was built in 1855, replacing a medieval Church. The sub-circular churchyard hints at a pre-conquest, early medieval religious foundation. There are several earthworks within the churchyard, together with a large recumbent limestone slab which may have prehistoric origins. These add to the Archaeological potential of this isolated parish Church.

Trecwn

Fenton, Tours through Pembrokeshire 1811 Trecwn

Hence I pursue the valley to its extremity at Trecoon, a mansion that formerly belonged to the highly honourable family of the name of Vaughan, of an ancient house in Monmouthshire, and settled in this country since the time of Henry the Seventh. On the failure of the male issue, it fell, at the death of the late Mrs Martha Vaughan, and with her of the extinction of the name, to a sister's son and her legal representative, Joseph Foster Barham, esq. Member of Parliament for Stockbridge in Hampshire; a gentleman who knows how to appreciate so beautiful a situation, and the conscious pride of succeeding to ancestors whose names will ever be mentioned with honour, whose character would confer lustre on any rank, and whose memory will ever be revered appears, appears to be attached to the country, and gives it reason to hope that it may felicitate itself on the accession of a gentleman of his superior endowments, who, by his frequent visits to this enviable retreat will prevent a melancholy chasm in this neighbourhood, that could not fail to be severely felt.

Trecoon, in point of situation, yields to very few spots in the county as possessing every ingredient of fine scenery, being situated on the edge of a steep Hill, having a higher at its back, sheltering it from the north above the narrow valle which the little river Cyllell rises in, and runs through, having the boundaries on either side nobly wooded, till where the valle terminates in a bold craggy rock, that projects from a healthy upland, affording ample room and subject for amusement to the sportsman. The valle, at a very small expense, may be laid under water, to form a most magnificent lake and capable of producing choice fish, the native trout of the river being large, red and of high flavour. Of this place may be said, what is not applicable to many places in the county, that the possessor, to improve it, has nothing to do but to cut down trees judiciously, the growth at present being too crowded. Under the roof I passed the night, enjoying company and conversation rarely to be met with in so retired situation, and experience the same kind and hospitable reception at I had been accustomed to meet with in that house from my childhood in the time of its former possessors. Its distance from the Market and post town of Fishguard is only three miles, and shut out as it seems to be from such prospects, a short but pleasant walk from the house takes you to an eminence that affords a view of the ocean in two or three places. In short I know not what Trecoon wants to make it the most desirable residence that a modest fortune, directed by judgement and taste cannot supply. The estate which it is the head of is nearly all contiguous and well circumstanced, possessing a hereditary sort of influence that bears no proportion to its rental, and what is not in the power of an infinitely greater fortune, going by the systematic mode of modern fashionable life at this day to create.

Tre Cwn

A modern mansion on the site of one visited and eulogised by Fenton as the home of "a highly honourable family of the name of Vaughan" (Tour p343). An inscription (dated a century later than the occurrence it commemorates) records the fact that under a fine oak tree John Wesley preached in the year 1777 –visited 18th June 1915.

Trecwn House Garden RCAHMW

Gothic script suggests site of antiquity (2nd ed.O.S.) Extensive estate merging into woodland to south and east.

This garden is depicted on the Second Edition Ordnance Survey 25-inch map of Pembrokeshire

IX, sheet 16 (1907). Its main elements on that map include woodland, relict hedgelines, possible formal garden, quadrangular enclosure, parterres, pond, parkland, orchard, heated wall, walled garden, greenhouse, fountain, two aviaries and bridge. C.S.Briggs 17.10.05

Trecwn 2000 --site of disused Naval Depot and its ancillary housing.

RNAD Trecwn

The former naval depot at Trecwn is virtually hidden from the outside world in a narrow valley south of Fishguard. It was built at the start of the Second World War as a munitions storage facility and has fifty-eight long storage tunnels dug into the hillsides, all served by a purpose- built railway network. The railway was made of copper to reduce sparks when transporting explosives. A series of interesting bunkers survive in the valley bottom to the north-east at SM 991333 and SM 991335, recorded during RCAHMW aerial reconnaissance. T. Driver, RCAHMW, 20th March 2009

Royal Navy Armaments Depot the depot was established in 1939. It is now clearly signposted on the A40 road.

It was developed as an ammunition depot and remains as such. Its proximity to a deep harbour at Milford Haven being a major factor, as well as the suitability of the chalk in the hills.

The depot is located in a secluded valley approximately 3 miles south of Fishguard off the A40 trunk road. The site is entirely surrounded by a secure steel fence topped with barbed wire and runs up both sides of the valley, a distance of three miles. A private road 2 miles long brings you to the main gate with the usual guard facilities and a weighbridge. The first buildings are the staff facilities and canteen followed by many surface factory style buildings for the testing and handling of munitions. There is a large boiler house for the production of steam which is then piped on the surface to various buildings around the site.

About a mile into the site the narrow gauge railway facilities commence with maintenance sheds and a covered transfer building,

There are a total of 58 storage chambers, each extending into the hillside for 200 feet, arranged in a herringbone formation along both sides of the valley. Each one has alarmed steel doors with its own siding off the narrow gauge railway

The depot also now houses the property services agency.

It is the major employer in the area, and some 300 men work there.

The depot extends for four miles up the valley into the Gwaun valley, and has a perimeter of some 8 miles. Much of it is shrouded by trees.

2003. There is still security and maintenance staff at the depot and the buildings and grounds are in good order.

RNAD Trecwn has both standard and narrow (2ft 6in) gauge lines. The depot has its own branch off the Fishguard to Carmarthen line and after a small platform area outside the depot for staff the line enters the site via lockable steel gates into the main marshalling yard where the line splits into 8 parallel loops. The standard gauge line then travels the entire length of the valley alongside the narrow gauge line which has points for the siding to each storage chamber.

At Fishguard harbour the main line passed the ferry terminal and continued along the main breakwater for transfer of munitions to Royal Navy ships

The Western Daily Mail (25/10/2003) reports that The Manhattan Loft Corporation, pioneers of loft living in the UK and regenerators of inner city London have taken over Trecwn in a joint venture with property developer Richard Harrington. The surface buildings will be let as industrial units and there are plans to have a sophisticated storage and distribution centre using the 59 underground storage tunnels. The new company is called 'The Valley (Pembrokeshire) Ltd.

Non Conformist Chapel Trecwn

Mamre Methodist Chapel was built in 1843, modified in 1864 and rebuilt in 1909. The present Chapel, dated 1909 was designed by architect H.W. Evans of Solva and builders D.H.Thomas & Son of Llanymchaer. It is built in the Simple Gothic style of the long-wall entry type.RCAHWW, November 2010

This cause was begun in 1843. The membership is now down to a dozen. The Chapel itself abuts an empty Chapel house, but is a robust building. It even has a small gallery. There is not a minister at present.

Housing

The housing is mainly rented. Wesley place is a district council estate of concrete built housing. This is the main estate, of semi-detached Houses.

Barham road and Hill are m.o.d. Houses, most of which are unoccupied. The former are Semi-detached brick dwellings, whilst the latter comprise blocks of four Flats, also brick built. The remaining dwellings are all much older and usually of stone from Llanymchaer quarry. Further building is precluded by the Rules governing proximity to Explosives.

Adult Facilities

Sparse --For adults, there are two licensed Clubs.

One is run by the m.o.d. Police and is generally used for dancing, parties and other activities that can include children, since the bar is totally separate. Not open every night.

The other club is run by its own Committee and provides drinking facilities every night of the year. This club also provides bingo, skittles and other pub pursuits, and Is open to both sexes.

Outdoor facilities for children are limited to one small football field and an adjoining play area with a few swings, etc.

Farming

The local farming has until recently been mixed with a predominance of dairy farming. This has drastically changed since the milk quota reallocation of 1984.

More potatoes are now grown as well as more beef stock rearing. Goats and sheep are also more numerous.

Most of the farms are small, with 180 acres being the largest as of now. The land is good and the area will continue to be mainly agricultural.

Population

The population is small,- some 230 adults and 75 children(18-) with a high degree of pensioners who first came to settle in the village as young people to work in the depot.

Sites of Interest

Llygad y Cleddau Maenhir

An erect and somewhat pointed stone, about 500yds south east of Llygad y Cleddau farmhouse. It faces north east, and stands 75 in above ground. The adjoining field to the south west is styled "Parc Carreg" –visited 18th June 1915.

Castell Bucket

This is a circular earthwork about 250yds west by south of Bucket farmhouse and close to the southern boundary of the parish. It stands 300ft above sea level, on the field known as Castell. Southward the position has a natural defence in the slope above the small stream which divides this parish from that of Llanychaer. No advantage however has been taken of it, and a space has been left between the enclosing bank and the sloping ground. The level gradually rises to the north east. The enclosed area has a diameter of 195ft. The bank though broken in places, and everywhere covered with heavy undergrowth, is fairly continuous on the north west where it rises to a height of 4ft and falls 10ft to the natural level; on the southwest it has a height of 2ft and falls 7ft. The entrance 10ft wide is to the west; it is protected by two parallel banks 60ft in length, and 6ft in height. The distance between these banks is 50ft. They do not join up with the main work, and the ends leave an entrance 12ft wide at the northeast and south east of the banks –visited 15th June 1915

[Lieut Col W Ll Morgan R.E, writes that he regards this feature as a counterpart of the Roman titulus, and that it shows the effect of Roman influence on the fortifications of the Romano Britons.

Castell Llygad y Cleddau

On a field known as "Parc Castell" belonging to the farm Lygad y Cleddau are the faint traces of a circular earthwork not marked on the 6in Ord sheet. The enclosure measured about 150ft in diameter. The outline of the surrounding wall is very faint – visited 15th June 1915

Waun Castell

A well preserved semi circular enclosure standing in Waun Castell Wood half a mile east west of Tre cwn House. The defence consists of a rampart on three sides, the west side being protected by an almost vertical slope of 80ft to a nameless stream. The bank has a length of 450 ft and a height of 15ft, with a fall of 20ft to a ditch 15ft wide and 6ft deep. The entrance, 15ft wide is to the north east the ends of the rampart on either side being well marked. In 1905 a stone spindle whorl, now in the possession of the headmaster of Trecwn school was found in the centre of the enclosure. visited 18th June 1915.

Castell Cwm wyntyll

The remains of a circular work about 600 yds north east of Cwm wyntyll farm house, marked a Castell on the 6in sheet, and standing on a field known as "Parc Castell". The enclosure is unusual in having an inner ditch. The length of the existing bank is 160ft; traces of its course are visible in the field to the east. The ditch on the east side has been destroyed. It is best seen to the west where it has a depth of 2ft with a bank of 5ft high falling 4ft; beyond the ditch is a second bank at a slightly lower level than the inner bank. On the day of inspection these ditches were heavily waterlogged, and the whole work is covered with undergrowth and difficult of both access and examination – visited 19th June 1915

Ffynnon Fair

A spring in Ffynnon Fair Wood, about half a mile north east of the parish Church. No memory survives of a local cult –visited 18th June 1915,

Llanstinan House, Trecwn RCAHMW

A large ruined 18th century complex with later alterations. 3-storey double pile building built of rubble with brick partitions. A.J. Parkinson.2004

Llanstinan House Gardens

The lodge and entrance to drive.

Said to be a listed building. Small circular. No roof. round arch over doorway. Elaborate 'gothic' window frame. Stone gate jambs with distorted, rusty, metal gate. Carriage drive evident to A40.

East of A40 the drive has been replaced by a modern wider road. After two hundred yards there are mature (Ash, oak, sycamore) trees alongside, especially on the north (left, river) side.

Entrance splay although main drive turned north at this point. Modern MOD gate. Some stone walling survives at each side of and on the bridge which crosses a wet area which includes the stream (nant y bugail). Some metal railing on each side of drive mostly convoluted and on its side.

Main('back') drive curves to the left to the ruined coach/stable block. It bends past the back of the house and up the slope towards home farm. Immediately after the house is a narrow, raised area with a stone retaining wall, backed by the high brick wall which has one complex/porched gateway and one blocked-up arch. Was this something to do with a kitchen garden and/or a privacy wall screening the garden from the staff cottages and working areas across the drive? It continues some distance northwards becoming a lower stone wall. The rounded shaped garden is enclosed by a barbed wire fence. It is much overgrown but various features are discernable from its construction in 1908.

There were steep terraces running parallel with the south wall of the house. The owner provided a sketch which corresponds with the map and our own observations.

Visitors would drive up the slope around the outer edge of the garden to the turn-around in front of (north) the main entrance.

The croquet lawn was in front of the east side of the house. along its southern edge twelve palms were planted of which nine survive. Being rather hemmed in by overgrowth they are fairly tall but rather lanky. There are formal steps from the corner of the house to the next level past a rockery of large quartz stones. This looks 'Victorian' but we don't know when it was made. Various trees and shrubs remain but the lay-out is difficult to discern. Cherry-Laurel, Rhododendrons, Box, Cryptomeria, Cupressus, two more palms. One can imagine the tennis court and flower beds. The lime avenue has completely disappeared. We can see no trace of it in the fields of grass.

The walled kitchen garden. 1830's ?

The entire stone walls are largely intact except for the large gap at the north of the west wall to allow access for cattle and vehicles to the grass area. It is an unusual shape the south wall being curved out. It is not possible to discern either the position of paths or greenhouses or the water course shown on the maps. There are two blocked up gateways (NE and mid).

At the NW corner is a seven-sided stone building with a window space and two doorways allowing access through it from outside into the garden.

At the NE corner of the garden is the remains of an old fig tree hanging on to life. Outside the NW corner is an evergreen oak.

The map (IX.12 First Edition) show a presumed orchard and buildings to the east of the walled garden with a system of canals - from well up the valley. Mill ? and or irrigation ? Nothing visible today.

Tresiders of Cardiff are said to have designed the garden but we have seen no accounts or records from the time. Tresiders was one of the famous Truro gardeners who established himself in 1870 in Cardiff. The present firm has no records. They are said to have designed and planned the Fishguard Bay Hotel site. G.H. WHGT 1996-7.

Llandissilio,

Llandissilio St Tyssilio (SN 120218)

(Acc/to the Topographical Dictionary of Wales.)

Llandissilio a parish partly in the lower division of the hundred of Derllys county of Carmarthen and partly that of Dungledy county of Pembroke 5 1/2 miles N by E from Narberth on the road to Cardigan containing 1025 inhabitants. This parish which derives its name from the dedication of the Church is about 5 miles in length and four miles in breadth, and comprises two divisions, which are respectively situated in the counties of Carmarthen and Pembroke, each separately maintaining its own poor; the lands are enclosed and in a good state of cultivation and the soil is in general, fertile. It constitutes a prebend in the collegiate Church of Brecknoch, rated in the kings books at £12 9s 4 1/2. d and in the patronage of the Bishop of St David's . The living is a discharged vicarage in the archdeaconry of Carmarthen and diocese of St David's rated in the King's Books at £7, endowed with £400 royal bounty and in the patronage of the Bishop of St Davids. The Church dedicated to St Tyssilio has no architectural claims to notice. In the churchyard leaning against the south side of the Church is an ancient stone of large dimensions, with the inscription in rude characters LVTORICI FIL PAVLINI MARINI LATIO. It was dug up from under a heap of rubbish by the present incumbent, in the year 1827 and placed by him in its present situation; tradition, however, of its existence had been preserved in the parish which led to its discovery. There is a place of worship for Baptists in that division of the parish which is in the county of Carmarthen and one for Independents in that which is in the county of Pembroke. Morris Jones esq. in 1621 bequeathed a rent charge of £2 payable out of his farm of cae Helig in the parish of Wrexham county of Denbigh, to be distributed in White Bread among the poor of the parish. John Matthias of Kilvaur, bequeathed £1 1s per annum for a sermon on the uncertainty of human life to be preached here annually on the second Sunday in June. Cicely Morris by deed enrolled in 1776 gave £2 2s. per annum for the instruction of five poor children of this parish and £2 2s. for apprenticing them to some trade, these tems are chargeable on lands in the parish and are duly appropriated according to the intention of the benefactress.

On the farm of Casgwyn in that part of the parish which is in the county of Pembroke, is an ancient encampment comprising a semi circular area 240 yds in circumference with an entrance 15 yds in width. The aspect is to the west and commands an extensive tract of country. Small Cannon balls have been turned up by plough in its vicinity. Another encampment of similar form and commanding the same tract of country is seen on a farm called Portispark, in the part of the parish which is in the county of Carmarthen; it is situated on an eminence and included an area of which the cord is one hundred and thirty yards in length. On the farm of Llwynyebol is a circular encampment thirty yards in diameter surrounded by a rampart 3ft high; in the centre are two stones 4ft in height and in a position inclining from the perpendicular. There were formerly about 20 of these varying in height and at a distance of 200 yards to the NW is a small circle within which are 2 erect stones from 4 to 5 ft in height near which it is supposed was formerly a third stone so placed as to form an altar. Two avenues of stones, in opposite directions, but both tending to the circular enclosure may still be traced; and around this relic of British antiquity are scattered numerous barrows, varying in dimensions, in one of which, on its being cut through in forming the present road from Narberth to Cardigan was found an entire vessel rudely formed of coarse Pottery. The average annual expenditure for the support of the poor amounts to £270 5s. of which sum £179 2s. is raised on that part which is in the county of Carmarthen and £91 3s. on that in the county of Pembroke.

this vicarage is in the patronage of the Bishop, and the rector of this Church was the prebendary of Llandissilio in the Collegiate Church of Brecon.

This Church was assessed in 1291 at £8 for tenths to the King. - (Taxatio.)

(Acc/to The Old Parish Churches of South West Wales by Mike Salter 1994.)

The nave seems to have been widened as its width now corresponds to that of the chancel and the narrow north vestry or Chapel. Except for one 17c south window and a 15c top to that next to it the openings are 19c. Set in the south wall are two early inscribed stones.

Llanfair Nant Gwyn,

The State of Education in Wales 1847

There is no resident Clergy. It is an agricultural parish with labourers receiving 6d to 8d a day with food and 1s a day on their own finding. There is no resident land proprietor or day school provision for education of the poor of but almost all go to Sunday school. Many of the population can read but not write. 1839 Llanvair Nantgwyn (Llan-Fair-Y-Nant-Gwyn)Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis

Llanvair Nantgwyn (Llan-Fair-Y-Nant-Gwyn), a parish, in the union of Cardigan, hundred of Kemmes, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 7 miles (S. by E.) from Cardigan; contains 241 inhabitants. This parish, which is pleasantly situated in the north-eastern part of the county, derives its name from the dedication of its Church to St. Mary, and the distinguishing adjunct to its name, probably from the abundance of white quartz stones scattered over the lands and in the bed of a brook by which it is watered. It comprehends a tract of about 1400 acres of rather flat but dry land, for the most part inclosed, and in a good state of cultivation; the soil, though light, is in general fertile, and the inhabitants are chiefly employed in agriculture. The scenery is not distinguished by any peculiarity of feature, but from the higher grounds are some good prospects over the adjacent country. The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £800 royal bounty; net income £80; patron and impropiator, Thomas Bowen, esq., whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £105. The Church is not distinguished by any architectural details of importance. There is a place of worship for Baptists, with a Sunday school held in it. John Jones, in 1729, bequeathed a rent-charge of 20s. to the poor, and a similar sum to the officiating minister for preaching four sermons annually; but this charity is at present suspended.

Sites of Interest

Castell Coch

The remains of a circular earthwork are barely perceptible on a field known as Parc Castell Coch half a mile to the north east of the parish Church. The diameter of the enclosed area is about 200 ft. Nowhere is the bank above 2ft in height, and in places it has disappeared. The east side is merged into a hedge which probably conceals the entrance. Any ditch which may have surrounded the bank has disappeared. The third field west of the earthwork is known by the name Parc y ffynnon Goch it contains a good spring. The field next east is called Parc y cerrig gwynion – visited 8th September 1914.

Castell Duffryn Mawr

This is a fine Norman mound placed practically on the western boundary line of the parish, about 50yds to the south east of Dyffryn Mawr farm house. It rises to a height of over 20 ft from the bottom of the surrounding ditch. The centre of the summit which is 60 ft in diameter has a saucer like depression of some 10ft. Around this basin are the stone foundations, 5 ½ ft wide, of what was probably the turret or manor house. The ditch is 8ft wide and 10ft deep; the counterscarp is crowned with a thick quickset hedge. There are no signs of a Bailey. The field on which the mound stands is still known as Parc y domen.

In the spring of 1920 a narrow trench was driven into the west side of the mound, revealing two post holes each about one foot square, in the hard soil just outside the stone foundations. At the foot of each hole was a bed of decayed timber a foot thick visited 22nd April 1920.

St Meugan's well

The well Chapel of St Meugan has entirely disappeared, but there is no doubt that its site is occupied by the farmstead of Pistill Meugan which is situated immediately on the parish boundary, rather more than half a mile east by north of the parish Church. It was a site for fairs and also of the game of knappen between the Kemes men and the Emlyn men against the men of Cardiganshire. However an order was received from London “Thes are to will and require you being gent'men to us knowne to be well affected and forward in her Ma'tes service and good of the countrie forthwith with all convenient spede and to repaire to the place called St Meygans where somtyme offerings & superstitions pilgrimages have bene used, and there cause to be pulled downe and utterlie defaced all reliques and monuments of that Chappell, not leaving one stone thereof upon another”.

A strong spring still flows in the foldyard of Pistill Meugan Farm but of the Chapel not a trace remains above ground. visited 8th September 1914.

Carn Our

The third field of Meugan Well farm is so called but the name is not remembered, and no local traditions that would explain it seem to have survived.

Bwlch y garreg lwyd.

This is a farm at the place indicated. The name is doubtless to be associated with Parc y maen Llwyd the site of a removed maenhir. About 600 yds east of Bwlch y garreg lwyd farmhouse is the homestead of Cwm Bettws, a name betokening a small religious building of which no traces remain. The latter site is a little over a mile directly north of Pistill Meugan.

Llanfihangel Penbedw,

Llanfihangel Penbedw - St Michael's

Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis 1839

Llanvihangel-Penbedw (Llan-Fihangel-Penbedw), a parish, in the union of Cardigan, hundred of Kilgerran, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 5 miles (S. S. E.) from Cardigan; contains 343 inhabitants. This parish derives its name from the dedication of its Church to St. Michael, and the distinguishing adjunct to its name from the number of fine birch-trees growing in the vicinity. It is pleasantly situated in the northeastern part of the county, near the source of the river Nevern, which, after flowing through the parish, continues its course in a western direction, and falls into the sea at Newport. Within about forty yards of the source of the Nevern also springs up the small river Selly, which proceeds for a short distance eastward, and then flows northward and joins the Teivy. The parish comprises 2100 acres, of which 340 are common or waste land; it is generally in a good state of cultivation, and the surrounding scenery is diversified. Kilrhue is a good mansion, pleasantly situated in grounds tastefully laid out, and comprehending an agreeable variety of scenery. The old road leading from Carmarthen to Cardigan passes through the village. The living is a discharged rectory, rated in the King's Books at £6, and in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £135 per annum. The Church, which is situated in an extreme corner of the parish, is not remarkable for any peculiar architectural details.

Pembrokeshire Parsons

The earliest record of this rectory is in 1325, which shows that shortly previous to that date the patronage of the benefice belonged to John de Hastings, Earl of Pembroke. On 3 Dec., in that year, the Church of Lanvihanel in Wales, of the annual value of 6 marks, was assigned to Thomas Le Blount and Juliana his wife, late the widow of John de Hastings, as dower from her late Husband.— Close Rolls.

The Parish Church --RCAM

The present structure was practically rebuilt about the mid 19th century upon old foundations, The plan is of a nave 44ft by 12 ft, chancel 16 ½ ft north transept known as the Kilrhiw Chapel now used as a vestry, and a squat western tower with a slated roof which barely rises above the ridge of the nave. The windows have wooden frames. In the north wall of the nave are traces of a doorway now blocked. The entrance to the Church is by a pointed doorway in the west wall of the tower. The font is modern, and nothing could be learned of an earlier one. The churchyard is about one acre in extent –visited 11 October 1921.

The Old Parish Churches of South West Wales - Mike Slater 1994.

This derelict ivy-grown Church with a horse kept in the churchyard has a long narrow nave, a low west tower, a north transept, and a chancel reached through a plain pointed arch. Most of it is 13c but no pre 19c openings now survive.

The Church and was described in 2004 as "miserably abandoned and overgrown"; the growth was cleared subsequently but the Church remains in a poor state internally and from the manure latterly used as an animal shelter.

Pembrokeshire Church Plate J T Evans 1905

In this parish there is in present use a Chalice and Paten of plated metal. The cup is 7 in. in height, and its Bell-shaped bowl rests upon a baluster stem. Inscription : " Presented by Mrs Lloyd , Kilrhue, to the Church of Llanhhangel Penbedw ad 1860".

— The paten measures 8in. in diameter. The donor was the mother of the first Baronet, Sir

Thomas Davies Lloyd of Bronwydd, Cardigansbjie (creation 1863), and grandmother of the present baronet. Sir Marteine Owen Mowbray Lloyd . Sir Marteine is the 34th Lord of the Barony of Kemes by right of tenure, being the last Lord Marcher in the kingdom, and claims to be the representative of Martin de Tours, who accompanied William 1 to England. His father was Member of Parliament for Cardiganshire (L) 1865-8, and for Cardigan District 1868-74.

I visited the above parish on Sunday the 6th of February . It contained no school of any description. The Rector told me that there been no school in the parish to his knowledge since 1828. The children of small farmers go to NewChapel and Manordivey schools both in the Manordivey parish. The majority of laboured are too poor to send their children their children to school (Agricultural labourers receive 1s. on their own finding a day of 8d per day with food. Some could read but not write Welsh but none english)

The Church is situated in one extreme corner of the parish; it is in bad repair and very damp. The day of my visit was excessively cold and the congregation consisted of only four or five. There is in not one Church communicant in the parish; but the Rector told me that he did not think there was a single head of family in the parish who was not a member of one of the Dissenting Chapels in the neighbouring parishes. They are a very quiet set of men; there was not a single disturbance in the parish during the Rebecca riots

Tumuli

On the summit of Frenni Fawr 1297 ft above ord. The three in Llanvihangel Penbedw stand in line on the boundary between that parish and Penrhudd. The mound which occupies the precise summit has a height of about 6ft and a circumference of 250 ft. It appears to have escaped the attentions of Fenton. The other two he attacked with more zeal than discretion; and of them he writes “ We fairly intersected one, the largest, and made an immense opening in the other, no interment was found by the former, as went the tradition and probably its companion too, about thirty years ago [c1770] from a supposition that it contained treasure, had been ransacked”(Tour 510) These mounds are smaller than the “Monarch” as Fenton terms the largest, their base circumference being about 170ft and their present height from 3 to 4ft. All are covered with Gorse. --visited 10th September 1914.

Llanvyrnach

The neighbouring village of Llanvyrnach is said to derive its name from the following circumstance. When the good St. Byrnach was making his pilgrimage through this portion of the country, he could at first obtain no better quarters than a cowshed; thus, as the story goes, arose the name of Llanbeudy, the Church of the Cowhouse. The next day the saint fared even worse, for, coming to Cilmaenllwyd, he was obliged, for lack of better accommodation, to repose beneath the Gray cromlech that gives the place its name. The third night, however, St. Byrnach came to a place where he was accorded a kindly welcome, and provided with a comfortable night's lodging. Overcome with gratitude for this hospitable reception, St. Byrnach declared the place should ever after bear his own name; and hence it is called to this day Llanvyrnach, or the Church of St. Byrnach.

Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis 1833

Llanvyrnach (llan-vrynach), a parish in the hundred of Kemmes, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 8 miles (S.W.) from Newcastle-Emlyn, containing 979 inhabitants. This parish, which derives its name from the dedication of its Church, is situated in the north eastern part of the county, bordering upon Carmarthenshire, and comprises an extensive tract of land, of which the greater portion is enclosed and cultivated. The surrounding scenery though not characterized by any peculiarity of feature, is generally pleasing and in some instances picturesque: the soil, though inferior in fertility to that of other parts of the county, is not unproductive. An extensive common, connected with Precelly mountain, rises to the west of the village, but an enclosure of land was made in the parish a few years ago. On the banks of the river Tâf, and at no great distance from its source, are some extensive lead mines, which were formerly worked with great success; but for some years the works have been suspended. The living is a discharged rectory, in the arch-deaconry of Cardigan, and diocese of St Davids, rated in the King's Books at £10, and in the patronage of the King, as Prince of Wales. The Church, dedicated to St. Brynach, is not remarkable for any architectural details of importance. There are places of worship for Baptists and Presbyterians. On the common above the Church are four large erect stones, visible at a great distance, marking out, according to tradition, the graves of two chieftains who were slain in a desperate battle which is said to have been fought near that spot: and near the Church is a large tumulus, which is supposed to have been surmounted by a Castle, or fort, to defend the pass. There are several mineral springs within the parish but their peculiar Properties have not been ascertained. The average annual expenditure for the maintenance of the poor is £194. 9s

NB The Church was appropriated to the Knights Hospitallers of Slebech by Robert son of Stephen under the title ecclesia Sancti Bernachi de Blaentav

The present structure was erected in 1842. It consists of nave, chancel, and low west tower. The font is a plain octagonal basin of 25 ½ in. exterior and 20in. interior diameter, chamfering off to an octagonal shaft of modern masonry; the base is concealed beneath the wooden floor. On one of the faces of the bowl the letters T.D. have been rudely cut – visited 16th September 1914.

Lost Inscribed Stone

A sepulchral slab bearing an inscription appears to have been in existence in this Church at the commencement of the 18th century. A hitherto unpublished letter written to Edward Lhuyd on the 26th September 1708 by Mr David Lewis of Pnat y benne Llanboidy, co Carmarthen runs as

“Happened to be at Llanvyrnach Church in the County of Pembroke I took notice of a stone lying under the altar in the chancel about two ft. broad each way and 5in. thick It was a sort of ragged milestone of the nature of the stone at Parke. I turned the stone, and ordered yit to be washed, and there discovered some lettrs which I have transcribed to the best of my endeavor and care thus TAVUS—FI ____ but it seems yet there [are] more lettrs, but yet they were woren out or yet the stone laid in some other place regardless till it was carried there. The first letters gives me some apprehension or light yet from Tavus the man whos sepulchral monument it was the river Tafer might be denominated, for this place being within two short miles to the spring of yt river. Moreover, here is a Barrow about the bigness of yt att Llanboydy, hollow within and about 5 or 6yds deep and about the bigness of a cocpit in the bottom, and a camp about a bow shot from it. And some farmers bouse near this Church called y Tre fawr yn'r dheubarth, and the old Roman way menc' oned in my description of Lhanboydy is visible here as[? In} several places the east side of the river (Ashmolean Collection, No 1816, fo 38 Bodleian Library)”

It is probable that this important inscribed stone was utilised in the rebuilding of the Church in 1842, and may lie hidden in the modern structure, or it may have been removed at that date to one of the neighbouring farmsteads. Careful search should be made for it, and in subsequent alterations to the Church its possible presence in the walls should not be forgotten.

The master has a good control over his scholars and pays much attention to them. The scholars are farmers mechanics, and labourers children, and were almost all well dressed.

They read the fifth chapter of St Matthew, many of them with ease. To questions proposed by me, partly in English and partly in Welsh, they answered a few Scriptural questions but not very Readily. Had poor knowledge of geography. But good on arithmetic and had knowledge of trigonometry and grammar. The above efficient day school is due to the exertions of the Rector.

Mining Llanfyrnach

Fronlwyd Mine A small silver-lead mine comprising two adits (both open) and an associated shaft, 500 yards west of Crymych village. Worked as a trial circa 1864 and in 1874. No structures survive.

Llanfyrnach Mine. Includes the Llwynceilyn Mine. Extensive silver-lead workings on either side of the Afon Taf 700 yards north east of Llanfyrnach Church, partially within Clydey parish.

The earliest documentary evidence of working on this site is for the setting of tributes on the Llandre section west of the river in 1752. At that date Llandre and the Llwynceilyn section, east of the river, were under separate ownership and worked independently. Amalgamated as one working and eventually brought under one owner, the mine was at work until the 1790s when drainage difficulties caused its abandonment.

Reworking commenced in about 1840 and continued unbroken until 1890. Peak production came late in its life at a time of falling lead prices when the output of silver-lead ores was supplemented by a moderate amount of zinc ores. The mainstay of output at that time was a rich ore body, on the Water Lode, confined to the Llandeilo beds and dipping under the north western Hill. This was worked from North Shaft to a depth of 96 fathoms below adit. When the lode was displaced by a cross course and not immediately relocated heavy drainage costs caused final abandonment in 1890 and the sale of the plant in the following year. A number of schemes for reworking the mine have been put forward but never implemented.

The Llanfyrnach site is relatively undisturbed, there having been no reworking of spoil or tailings, and it is one of the better examples of a late 19th century silver-lead mine in South Wales. Although in a ruinous state it displays a wide range of 19th century Mining and dressing technology underlying which will be evidence of 18th century working. Any development or landscaping of the site should be monitored to prevent disturbance of sub surface stratigraphy, or at least record the evidence before it is lost.

18th century shallow shaft workings along outcrop of two veins on hillside to west of the river remain undisturbed. Other 18th century workings to the east covered by 19th century operations comprising three engine / winding shafts, various minor shafts and two adits all now filled or collapsed.

Boiler house (ruin) with round chimney (intact) at No.2 Engine Shaft, circa 1850.

Cornish style beam pumping engine house (ruin), originally housing a 40" cylinder engine, erected in 1860; adjacent to No.1 Engine Shaft.

Waterwheel pit (intact), pumping and winding, adjacent to No.1 Engine Shaft

Pumping and winding engine sheds (foundations only) adjacent to North Shaft .

Masonry lined pit for drawing machine circa 1860 (intact) adjoining Chain Shaft .

Ore hoppers and loading platform (substantial walling and support columns remaining) adjacent to North Shaft .

Tramway system (earthworks only) from North Shaft to spoil heaps and dressing floor; from Chain Shaft to spoil heaps east of river; and from dressing floors to tailing heaps.

Dressing floors including ore hoppers (ruin); four round buddles with associated waterwheel pit and settling Tanks (earthworks); dressing waste heaps.

Spoil heaps, comprising extensive heaps from North Shaft on western hillside, 1880s; and from Chain Shaft on the east side of the river, 1860 - 70, all displaying indications of temporary tramway system.

Tailings heaps, with earlier heaps around dressing floor and extensive later heaps at southern end of site.

Leat system - comprising leat from stream to south east of site feeding pumping waterwheel to west of, and connected with, No.2 Engine Shaft, probably of 18th century origin (feeding stamps mill), with later compensation dam (earthworks); engine leat from Afon Taf to area of No.1 Engine Shaft, plus compensation dam two miles upstream at (substantial earthworks); and late 19th century turbine feed, leat system originating near Bwlch Stop to the west of Hermon with storage ponds on Hill top to west of mine and pipeline under spoil heaps south of North Shaft (earthworks plus some in-situ pipes).

Offices and housing - including a building with flue system, possibly used as drying room, to west of No.1 Engine Shaft (ruin); mine captain's house and offices at (ruin); worker's housing, Brick Row formerly 12 back to back cottages (intact but much altered, inhabited) and Storehouse (ruin); lessees house, now known as Carregwen (intact and inhabited).

Un-named Mine SN 20163304 (approx.) Adit reportedly discovered near Glantaf. No historical detail available. Not yet positively identified on ground.

Meini Hiron

About ½ mile west of the village of Llanfyrnach are three erect stone in close proximity.

1] in the north west corner of Parc y Maen on the farm of Nant y groes. The height from the ground to the somewhat pointed top is 72 in and the greatest width 28 in.

2] Also on Nant y Groes Farm. The stone has a height above ground of 104 in with a maximum width of 54 in It is said on the farm that another and somewhat similar monolith stood near it. It was buried to facilitate ploughing.

3] About 200 yds north by west of the last stone are two adjoining erect stones. The field hedge has been brought up to the taller of the two; this rises 134 in above the soil. The second stone is 96 in above ground –visited 16th September 1914.

The stones here enumerated are doubtless those described in Lewis's Tp Dict as “four large stones on the common above the Church, visible at a great distance marking out, according to tradition the graves of two chieftains who were slain in a desperate battle which is said to have been fought near that spot.”

Caer at Glandwr

An earthwork apparently circular, but much obliterate, stands on the third field west of Glandwr farm house. The bank is fairly perfect around the southern part of the circle; to the north it has been cultivated entirely away. In its length of 135 yds it only rises at its best to 3ft, and falls 5ft to the outside level. There is no trace of a ditch. According to the 6in Ord sheet a “sword , etc” were found here in the year 1808, but all enquiries respecting such a find have been without result. visited 24th June 1915.

Mound

A motte Castle with traces of a Bailey court, immediately north west of the parish Church; on the 6in Ord sheet it is marked as a tumulus. The mound rises to a height of 25ft; its summit is 60 ft in diameter. In the centre a depression of from 8 to 10 ft is surrounded with traces of stone foundations. There have a width of 8ft. The mound, the sides of which are heavily clothed with vegetation is being dug for gravel; otherwise it is well preserved. Between it and the churchyard are faint traces of the Bailey –visited 16th September 1914

Ffynnon Fyrnach

About 1 ½ mile south of the parish Church is a well which is known as Bernachs or Brynachs Well, traditionally stated to possess healing Properties. The site id marked “spring” on the present 6in. Ord map, but on the earlier 1in it is styled “Ffynnon deg” the Fair well. The spot is not far from the source of the Dyfnant, and close to the ford over that streamlet called Rhyd y maengwyn. There is a Ffynnon wen, the white (of holy) well in the Carmarthenshire parish of Eglwys Fair a churig, a short mile south of the above.

Ty un nos

A small cottage at Hermon 200 yds north west of Capel Bryn Mmynach, which calls for no mention as an antiquity apart from its name and the example it affords of a sysyem that must have been fairly prevalent in Wales before the days of Inclosure Acts. This is a “One night house” as it is called; put up inaccordance with an arrangement made between a man and his friends to erect a dwelling in one night on unenclosed land belonging to the Lord of the manor, or ground over which he claimed to have control. All the materials having been got ready for the purpose, a night was fixed for the errection of a dwelling of turf and stones; a few domestic articles were taken in, a fire kindled in the hearth, and the family was in full possession by the morning; if possible a small garden Patch was added. If the manorial magnate did not demolish the cot(a course which was seldom resorted to), or had not claimed it at a nominal rent within a year and a day of such erection, he could not afterwards interfere with it, but might continue to exact the small rent as evidence of his rights.

Ruins of Chapel and Burial Ground

Onthe second field east off Tre Henry farm house is a circular enclosure which is known locally as “The Chapel”. Green mounds aberaging one ft in height Mark the former presence of a building about 24ft by 12 ft. The enclosure has a circumference of 300 ft, its south west boundary being a dry wall construction of small stones on which still stand a few aged trees. visited 16th September 1914.

Nant y Groes

This is the name of a farm immediately north of Tre Henry Chapel and burial ground, where there may have been a medieval cross, but of such there is no trace – visited 16th September 1914.

Bronze Celt

A fine bronze celt was found in the year 1841 on land then recently enclosed and appropriated to the farm of Yet wen in the immediate neighbourhood of the Caer (Carn?) near Glandwr, where it is said that a sword was unearthed in 1808. It is now in the museum of the Carmarthenshire Antiquarian Society.

Coins Roman

In the year 1828 “Roman Coins” were found on the summit of Begney. No particulars of this hoard can be traced. One small silver coin of the find – too much worn for identification , but undoubtedly Roman – is carefully treasured up by a lady in the near locality to whom it passed from her grandfather, who had been present at the discovery – Seen 15th June 1920 RCAM

Llanfyrnach Railway Station, Whitland And Cardigan Railway

Llanfyrnach Railway Station was on the Whitland and Cardigan Railway (nprn 410169) and it opened in 1875. There was a single through line served by a passenger platform (on the up side) with a passing loop to the north or Cardigan end. Llanfyrnach Silver-Lead Mine (nprn 34019) lay a short distance beyond, on the north side of the railway, and was once served by a short siding from the railway. The station closed in 1962; the platform building and two-storey Station House both survive. B.A.Malaws, RCAHMW, 26 January 2010.

a parish chiefly in the lower division of the hundred of Derlly's county of Carmarthen but partly in the hundred of Dungledy county of Pembroke 16 miles W of Carmarthen containing 733 inhabitants of which number 710 are in Carmarthenshire and the remainder in the Pembrokeshire portion of it. On the banks of the Taf in this parish anciently stood the famous Ty Gwyn ar Daf or "White house on the Taf" an occasional residence of Hywel Dda sovereign of all Wales, who about the year 940 convoked at this place a grand national council for the purpose of compiling and enacting the code of laws which has given so much celebrity to his reign and which are still known as "the Laws of Hywel the Good" In order to give greater solemnity to this convocation, and to implore the divine wisdom to assist their councils, the King remained here with his whole court during Lent in the constant exercise of prayer and other acts of devotion. Soon after the destruction of the Monastery of Bangor-Iscoed, in North Wales and the slaughter and dispersion of the brethren of that extensive establishment by the Northumbrian Saxons, a religious society was settled at this place under the auspices of Paulinus son of Urien Reged, a disciple of St Germanus, in which originated the abbey of Albalanda or Whitland afterwards erected near the site and called by the Welsh after the name of the former establishment, Ty Gwyn ar Taf. According to some historians, this establishment which was for brethren of the Cistercian order was founded by Rhys ab Tewdwr, Prince of south Wales in the reign of William the Conqueror; but Bishop Tanner with more probability ascribes it to Bernard Bishop of St David's who presided over that see from 1115 to 1147. It is related in the Welsh annals that Cadwaladr brother of Owain Gwynedd, prince of North Wales during the disputes which arose between him and his nephews the sons of Owain, entrusted the custody of his newly erected Castle of Cynvael to the abbot of Ty Gwyn ar Taf, who defended it with obstinate valour against the assaults of the young princes by whom it was besieged. After a determined resistance protracted till the walls of the Castle were beaten down and the whole of the garrison either slain or wounded, the abbot effected his escape from the ruins, through the assistance of some friends in the camp of the enemy, and retired into his Monastery. The Monastery, which was dedicated to St Mary and had an establishment of 8 monks, continued to flourish till the dissolution at which time its revenue was estimated at £153 17s 2d. Its site was granted in the 36th of Henry VIII to Henry Audley and John Cordel.

Old Whitland road from Carmarthen to Haverfordwest;

The parish is pleasantly situated on the river Taf and is intersected by the old Whitland road from Carmarthen to Haverfordwest;

It comprehends a large tract of good arable and pasture land, the whole of which with a very small exception is enclosed and in a good state of cultivation. The soil is fertile and the surrounding scenery is agreeably diversified and in many parts highly picturesque. This place constitutes a prebend in the cathedral Church of St Davids rated in the King's Books at £7 and in the patronage of the Bishop of St Davids. The living is a discharged vicarage in the archdeaconry of Carmarthen and diocese of St Davids rated in the kings books at £3, endowed with £400 royal bounty and £1200 parliamentary grant and in the patronage of the Bishop of St David's The tithes of the parish are divided between the prebendary and the vicar, the former of whom has two thirds and the latter one third; a part of it, which anciently belonged to the abbey is tithe free. The Church dedicated to St Canna, is a neat modern edifice rebuilt in the year 1820 and consisting of a nave and chancel, the former erected by a parochial rated, and the later at the expense of the lessee of the prebendal tithes. A school-house has been erected in the churchyard but no school has yet been established in the parish. The existing remains of the abbey are very inconsiderable, serving only to point out the site, in a sequestered valley sheltered by groves of stately growth to the right of the present turnpike road from St Clear's to Narberth. Of the royal palace of Ty Gwyn which was comparatively a small building, designed chiefly for a hunting seat, no vestiges at present are discernable. The average annual expenditure for the support of the poor is £282 0s 6d

Llangolman,

1839 Llangolman (Llan-Golman) Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis

A parish, in the poor-law union of Narberth, hundred of Kemmes, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 8 miles (N.) from Narberth; containing 255 inhabitants. This parish, which derives its name from the dedication of its Church to St. Golman, was formerly a Chapelry under the parish of St. Mary's. It is pleasantly situated on the Eastern Cleddy river, in the eastern extremity of the county; and is bounded by the parish of Mynachlogdû on the north, by that of Llandissilio on the south, by Carmarthenshire on the east, and by the parish of LLandilo on the west. It is intersected by the turnpike-road from Newport to Narberth, and its northern part by that leading from Fishguard to Narberth; and comprises 2912 acres, of which a considerable portion is arable, and the rest pasture, with a few acres of woodland: the chief produce is barley and oats, with a little wheat. The scenery is pleasingly varied, and the views over the adjacent country embrace some interesting features: the gentlemen's seats are Llangolman and Plâs-y-Meibion. Slate of good quality is found in the parish, and some quarries are worked upon an extensive Scale, affording employment to such of the inhabitants as are not engaged in agriculture. The living is a perpetual curacy endowed with £800 royal bounty, with the living of LLandilo annexed, also endowed with £800 royal bounty: the total net income of the joint living is £97. The tithes of the parish have been commuted for £110, of which £76. 6. 8. are payable to T. Bowen, esq., the patron. The Church is a plain edifice, forty-five feet Long and fifteen wide. In the parish is a place of worship for Independents, called LLandilo Chapel, in which a Sunday school is also held.

Llangolman

Onwards to Llangolman, the country is crumpled up into a succession of hills and narrow, rocky dingles, whereby the numerous streamlets that enliven this locality find an outlet from the foothills of Precelly. In one of these dingles is St. Teilo's Well, a wayside spring frequented by that saint in days of yore.

Llangolman Church, perched on its isolated monticle, presents a sorry spectacle of desecration and decay; its windows battered and broken, its roof open to the vault of heaven, while the rusty Bell hangs cracked and useless in the dilapidated turret.

Hugh Bowen , clerk, Bacon's Liber Regis

On 11 July, 1877, the livings of Maenclochog, Llandeign and Llangolman were united under an Order in Council.

The earliest mention of an incumbent of this curacy is William Crowther in 1765.

The Parish Church dedicated to St Colman.

Llangolman Church stands on high ground just to the south of the main village. The current building is Victorian or early Victorian with little to show of the original medieval building that once stood on the site. Of historical interest is the recording in the 19th century of a stone gate post about 100 to 200 yards from the churchyard. This stone, known as the Maen-ar-Golman (the stone upon Golman) is about 7 feet tall with a number of cross markings carved on the stone. The stone appears to have no inscriptions. The local belief is that Golman is buried nearby.

Llangolman (S. Colman).— An Elizabethan Chalice, 6 in. in height, with its Paten cover. The foot of the latter has been replaced by an ivory knob. Both pieces bear the maker's Mark only, viz. ^\jjj^ . The decoration as usual with this maker's vessels, consists of two bands round the bowl. The upper encloses woodbine foliage and intersects three times, whilst a spray of foliation is carried above and below each intersection. Within the lower band is engraved "+ POCVLVM » ECLESIE w DE « Llangolman »". Between the bowl and the stem and also on the base is a band of vertical line moulding. Diam. of bowl, 3in. The Paten cover measures 3 in. in diameter, and is quite plain.

Besides a brass Alms-dish there is also a Paten of plated metal, 7 in. in diam. In the centre of its six-lobed depression is engraved the sacred monogram. Sites of Interest

Llangolman House;Llangolman Farm, Llangolman

Apparently straight forward 18th C. Welsh house, but although most of the current house probably dates from the 18th century, the rear wing of the house has an older structure that includes barrel vaulting. There are two vaults one above the other. The lower vault covers the underlying cellar which has three rooms. The end room in the cellar and deepest includes the fresh water well. The first room, entered from an open arched doorway includes square holes in the vaulted ceiling that allowed butter to be easily dropped into the cellar for storage. Above the cellar vault is a second vaulted ceiling.

A 2-storey house with a slate pitched roof, stone end stacks, 3-window front (sash windows) and a modern projecting porch.RCAHWW

Burial Places

“There are two long mounds, apparently burial places. The local legend reports that the combatants slain in a battle were interned in these; victors in one, vanquished in the other. They do not appear to be Stone Age long barrows” Pem Arch Survey

The mounds could not be found. They are either completely overgrown or have been levelled, or the location is erroneously given

Waun Clun Coch Circles

Owing to the and almost impenetrable overgrowth on the site it is impossible to be certain of the character of the remains that exist here. There are several more or less pronounced saucer shaped depressions within a nearly circular dry stone wall, forming an enclosure of about 200ft diameter; but whether the remains are those of a series of hut dwellings in the last stages of decay and ruin, or whether the pit like hollows have been formed by the uprooting of a circle of huge boulders, it is impossible under present conditions to decide . Richard Fenton was here about the year 1800, and the melancholy disorder which prevails may be due to his ill regulated zeal. (Tour 351). visited 19th June 1914.

The Gaer, Bryn Golman

In a field on the farm of Bryn Golman, called Gaer Meadow are slight evidences of an earthwork, but it has been so defaced that it is impossible to judge of its former nature of extent. The enclosed area is about 225ft across. There are slight indications that the entrance was to the west where a modern hedge crosses the circle. visited 8th October 1914.

Castell Pengawsai (known locally as Castell Blaenllechog).

This is a small circular enclosure having a diameter of about 50 ft, situated about 180 yds west of Pengawsai farm house. The surrounding earth bank rises to a maximum height of 6ft, but has been removed for a section of the circuit. Outside is a broad ditch now only 2ft deep and in places altogether filled up, doubtless with the contents of the denuded and demolished bank. The entrance facing east has been altered. The earthwork would appear to possess many characteristics of the medieval moated homestead, though the latter is usually rectangular in form. The surrounding area is level, and the enclosure itself so feebly defended as to make it improbable that it was intended primarily for defence. visited 18th September 1914.

Clun Saithmaen

“from a Longstone which formerly stood in this farmyard six others in different directions could at one time be seen” (Pem Arch Survey p24)

About 200 yds away in a north west by west direction, the Survey reports a monolith which “stands against a bridge and has marks of chiselling on it” This stone is not indicated on the Ord sheet and could not be located.

The sites denoted by the following place names probably indicate the former presence of several of the “saith maen which are visible from one of them:-

Llangolman Slate Quarries

Geologically the area has a seam of Lakeland Green slate running roughly east-west along the Taf valley. The slate is generally of a greenish-Gray or light blue colour. Many of these quarries are located near Llangolman Farm with one of the quarries located immediately north of the farmhouse. The slate itself was exploited at least as early as 1860 although there is some suggestion that the Gilfach quarry may have been worked as early as the 16th century. The slate industry went into decline after the 1890s and by the 1930s quarries were closed due to competition from cheaper sources although Gilfach quarry was still in operation until 1987.

Llangwm (Lang Heim)

Langum. The Langum folk still retain peculiarities of dress, language and custom. They are probably a Norse remnant left in the midst of the surrounding Flemish population.

The name also may be Norse lang heimr, the Long village. (Owen.) This village with a Welsh sounding name is located deep in the heart of the Englishry. For centuries the name has been pronounced "Lang-gum" and the locals will take great offence if you try to Welshify it. The original settlers here were either Norse seafarers or Flemings - whoever they were, the place developed a reputation for clannishness and resentment against outsiders.

Located on the west bank of the Daugleddau estuary, Llangwm was inevitably a fishing village, with local people making a living from herrings, oysters and cockles. During the 1800's and early 1900's there was much trade connected with the coal industry, especially at Hook Colliery and many local men worked at the Pembroke Dockyard. There is a village green, with a Victorianised bellcote Church nearby. From Blacktar Point there are glorious views of the estuary, and cockles can still be dug from the mud.

The name of this parish is given as 'Llangwm' in the Diocesan Directory, but Dr. Henry Owen and other authorities are of opinion that the name being of Norse de-ri-ation should be written as Langum. George Owen, the Pembrokeshire historian, spells the name Langom or Langome. The Rectory was appendant to the manor of Langum. - (Owen's Pem.)

Originally it doubtless belonged to the Roche s of Roch Castle, and probably descended to the Longueville and Ferrers families through the two daughters and coheiresses of Thomas Roch, one of whom married Sir George Longueville of Wolverton, Bucks, and the other married Edmund, Lord Ferrers of Chartley.

Llangwm, a parish in the hundred of Rhos, county of Pembroke 5 miles SE by S from Haverfordwest containing 697 inhabitants. This parish, the name of which signifies "the Church in the valle " is pleasantly situated on the western bank of Milford Haven about the same distance from Pembroke as from Haverfordwest. Great Nash, formerly the residence of the family of Owen now of Orielton and Long noted for its hospitality, is now deserted by its proprietor and in ruins.

DumpleDale the seat of Mrs Jorden is a handsome modern mansion, very pleasantly situated and commanding a fine view of Milford Haven. At the village, which extends along the shore is a horse ferry to the parish of Coedcanlais. The inhabitants are principally engaged in a lucrative oyster fishery, the produce of which is generally sold at two shillings a bushel (Winchester Measure), to dealers from the coast of Kent, more especially to those of Chatham and Rochester, by whom they are taken away in sloops for the supply of the London Market; the average annual amount of the profits of this fishery is about £2000 and in a good season it frequently exceeds £3000.

Coal and culm

Coal and culm are found here in great abundance; the mines are worked by Sir John Owen Bart. who is the principle proprietor and the produce is shipped at Hook Quay for the supply of the whole district. The living is a discharged rectory in the archdeaconry and diocese of St David's rated in the Kings books at £7 12s 11d. Endowed with £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Mrs Owen Barlow. The Church dedicated to St Hierom is a spacious and venerable structure in the early style of English architecture, and contains some ancient monuments, among which are several to the memory of the family Roch. There is a place of worship for Methodists; George Roch in 1707 bequeathed a small rent charge for the instruction of poor children. The average annual expenditure for the support of the poor is £190 11s.

The Parish Church Dedicated to St Hierom (RCAM Pembroke 1920 No 367.)

In 1856 this Church was described as “ so entirely modernised externally as to almost to discourage any examination of the interior; which however, is by no means devoid of interest” (Glynne Notes Arch Camb). Since that date the building has again undergone restoration. It consists of a nave 44ft 6ins by 16ft 6ins; chancel 25ft by 16ft 6in; north transeptal Chapel known as the Roch Chapel 21ft by 15ft 6in; south transept 7ft 6in by 9ft; and a modern south porch. All the windows, with the exception of the east window of the Roch Chapel are modern. A squint passage lighted by a small loop runs between the chancel and the north transept. The Chancel arch is plain and pointed. Above it are two projecting corbels which support the rood. In the south-west corner of the chancel is a low window with trefoil head, now blocked, it shows slight trace of the shutter rabbet. The Roch Chapel which dates from the later half of the 14th century opens into the nave by an arcade of two bays, the arches springing from an octagonal pier on which is a shield bearing three bars for Barri; above are two smaller sheilds each charged with a bend sinister. In the east wall of the Chapel is a pillared piscina beneath a canopied niche; the pillar is ornamented with a number of plain sheilds. The head of the niche is pinnacled, crocketed and surmounted by a finial. It is figured in Fenton (Tour 240) from a sketch by John Carter. The east window of the Chapel is of two lights with trefoil heads. On the north side is an elaborate canopied tomb. The south transept is vaulted. It opens to the nave by a low pointed arch; in its east wall is a projecting corbel. In this transept resting upon an 18th century table is a black marble alter slab 52in by 26in. The font is 23 and a half in square with a basin of 18in by 17 in, mounted on a circular shaft; the base is modern. Of the two effigies in the Roch Chapel, the male is apparently in situ: in Fenton's time the female effigy occupied “the north side of the Communion rails, on the pavement” (Tours 240)

Incised Slabs

Three early incised slabs are preserved within the Church.

Two have their heads complete; of the third only a portion of the shaft of a calvary remains Langwm Church. — The building is cruciform in ground plan.

Mr. Stephen W. Williams and others spent some time in examining the recumbent effigies of a knight and lady in the north transept. Fenton, without hesitation, states that the figure of the knight is known to represent a member of the Roche family, but Mr. Stephen Williams expressed an equally confident opinion, from evidence on the tomb, that the figure represented a member of the Corbett family; but it is not clear that the Corbetts were ever intimately associated with Pembrokeshire. The knight's figure is clothed in mail, with a shirt of chain, and a cyclas reaching to below the knees, but the bottom parts of which have been broken away. It also had the steel cap called a basinette. These peculiarities enabled Mr. Williams to assign the effigy to a definite date — between 1330 and 1380. The effigy of the female probably represented the knight's lady. The knight's shield had been emblazoned, and some of the plaster upon which the painting was done still remained upon the shield.

What appears to be a combined aumbry and piscina is built into the east wall of the north transept. The decoration, with rows of shields, is of a remarkable character, and may have been the work of some local Mason of the fifteenth century.

The nave, the chancel, and a small barrel-vaulted south transept are 13c. In c1380 a bigger north transept, the Roch Chapel was added. It has a two bay arcade with Barri arms on the pier, two ogival headed recesses in the north wall containing the effigies of a cross-legged knight and lady, and a pillar piscina in the east wall. The Church was heavily restored in 1856.

On 10th July 1656 the union of the parishes of Langwm, Rosemarket and Freystrop was approved by the Commonwealth.

(Acc/to W. Grenville Thomas published in the Western Telegraph Oct 18 1989 as part of the Then and Now series.)

Llangwm Church

Acc to reputable tradition it was built during the 12c by the Great Nash branch of the distinguished de la Roche family who erected the early Roche Castle in about 1140 and granted the charter to the monks of Tiron, a reformed Benedictine Order for the founding of Pill Priory Milford 1170. Certainly the basic layout of the structure - cruciform shape with a nave, chancel, north Chapel and south transept conforms to the pattern of churches of the 12 & 13c. The first explicit documentary allusion occurs in the Taxatio Ecclesiastica of 1291(PRO London) when the Church of "Landegoin or Landegom" was assessed for tenths to the King at £8 - the actual tax payable being 16 shillings. The Church was a rectory in which the annual tithes to which all inhabitants were liable for the upkeep of the Church were paid directly to the incumbent. - for centuries the advowson - the right of presentation to the living - was passed down the de la Roche family and their descendants like a piece of real estate. When the male line was extinguished with the death of Thomas de la Roche in about 1410 it was bestowed upon his two daughters, one of whom married Sir George Longueville (died 1457) of Wolverton Buck's and the other married Edmund Lord Ferrars of Chartley, from whom the Devereaux of Lamphey, earls of Essex were descended.

In her manuscript "Langwm Scrapbook" (1953) the late Elizabeth Morgan reported that there had been an underground passage from Great Nash to the vicinity of the Church but for reasons of safety it had been filled in at the Nash end by Mr George P George (died 1939)

Even a parish with only 15 households in the far west of a sprawling and sparsely populated diocese could not remain indifferent to the 16c Reformation. The parish Church of "Langome" was mentioned in the Valor Ecclesiasticus of 1536/7, the national survey which preceded the Dissolution of the Monasteries. Written in Latin the extract confirms that the advowson was still in the hands of the Longueville and Ferrars families, that the rector was William Wogan, and that the value of the benefice was £7.12s.11d - the average for the diocese was £10.

Much more riveting is the revelation of the Calendar of State Papers that Wogan's successor, Richard Smithe was imprisoned by the bailiff (February 1540) for treasonable words. The iconoclastic, abrasive and sometimes litigious, Bishop Barlow (1536/47) had adopted a radical Protestant policy, and the likelihood is that the hapless rector indiscreetly expressed conservative Catholic sentiments which were unacceptable to the aggressive new establishment.

Though there is no direct evidence to verify it, it is tempting to conclude that John Bathoe who became rector of Llangwm in 1561 was the same man who had been ousted (1536/37) as the prior of the Augustinian friary at Haverfordwest during the Dissolution (Pembrokeshire County History Vol 3)

The Elizabethan Settlement (1559-1563) created the Anglican Church and restored communion in both kinds to the laity. One of the Church's most prized possessions is an Elizabethan Chalice, with paten cover which has been carefully described in J. T. Evan's "The Church Plate Of Pembrokeshire (1905) Six and three quarters inches high and over 12 1/2 ozs in weight, the bowl has been rather rudely repaired - in December 1832 - with a band of silver around the base.. Within the lower band on the bowl is inscribed " + POCYLUM + ECCLESIA + DE + LANGOM + " and underneath the foot RBP and RN have been roughly scratched. The oft repeated assertion that the chalice was a coronation gift from Elizabeth I is not convincing. Like the other 59 Elizabethan chalices in Pembrokeshire it was made by an unknown smith whose Mark consisted of four oval-shaped objects. The overwhelming majority of these chalices bear the dates 1574 or 1575 - 15 years after the Queen's coronation. Although its position precludes careful scrutiny the Church Bell is reputed to be Elizabethan. It has a Latin inscription which translates into "Holy Trinity , One God. Have Mercy on Us."

At the time when most of the parish Clergy were "simply learned" or meanly learned" and had not acquired the civilised restraint of their 20c counterparts, there was a marked difference in the quality of the rectors. Griffiths Toye, the incumbent for four years after 1583, was exceptional in that he was a graduate (B.A. and M.A.) of both Cambridge (1571) and Oxford (1574), who had been recruited as part of a diocesan campaign to raise the academic and preaching standards of the Clergy.

His long-serving successor Richard Bathoe was transparently not of the same stature. He formally complained to the Court of Star Chamber (1602) that in a fracas at Pembroke he had been set upon by an armed gang of Essex sympathisers including some women, after he had made a slighting reference in private conversation to the late Earl executed for an abortive coup against the Queen. When indicted, the accused counter-alleged that the rector was "a common haunter of alehouses and wine taverns a dice player and an all night dancer, that for almost 12 months he had disturbed the peace of Haverfordwest and Pembroke by riding about provocatively waving his sword and pistol, and that he was so lacking in elementary learning as to be, by common consent, unworthy of his priestly office." - (Pembrokeshire County History Vol 3)

Peregrine Phillips

It was the rectorship (1643-1663) of Peregrine Phillips - coinciding with the Civil Wars (1642 - 1648) the Protectorate (1652-1658) and the Restoration (1660) - which was memorably eventful. Acc/to J T Rees "History of Protestant Nonconformity in Wales" (1861) the Oxford-educated Phillips, the son of a vicar of Amroth, was appointed to the Llangwm living after briefly serving as his uncles curate at Kidwelly. Pluralism was very common, and with the backing of such gentlemen as Sir Hugh Owen, Sir Roger Lort and Sir John Meyrick, he was soon preferred first to Monkton and then to Pembroke St Mary's. When he preached before Oliver Cromwell and his troops during the siege of Pembroke (1648) he so impressed the future Protector that he was invited aboard the men-of-war about to undertake the Irish campaign. During the Protectorate, Phillips became widely known as a committed advocate of the government's religious policy. A very accomplished orator, hailed by many as the best in the county, he preached in almost every Church English and Welsh, and before the Justices of the Assizes at Cardigan, Haverfordwest and Carmarthen. He must have relinquished his Pembroke incumbency when the parishes of Llanwn, Freystrop and Rosemarket were united (July 1656). On one occasion, the intrepid rector had an experience which convinced many of his admirers that Providence had a special affection for him. When riding homeward late at night, both he and his horse plunged into a deep coal-pit at Freysrop and were firmly wedged in the narrow mouth a few feet from the surface. He was rescued by the proprietor Captain Longmans, who had been appraised of his perilous predicament by an unnamed deaf woman and her alert grandson. Peregrine Phillips continued to be very active as an open-air preacher and public Evangelist until soon after the restoration he fell foul of the Act of Uniformity (1662) which banned all acts of worship not conducted in accordance with the Book of Common Prayer. Ejected from the Established Church, this amiable but unrepentant non-conformist withdrew to Dredgeman Hill

Farm which he held from Sir Herbert Perrot, of Haroldston, and which he converted into an Independent house Church (1665). Thereafter he became the accredited pastor of the Green Meeting, a non-conformist group of 50/60 which assembled in a little room on St Thomas's Green and which was to develop into Albany Congregation (now United Reformed) Church Haverfordwest. Upon his death at 68 years of age in September 1692, this unforgettable former rector of Llangwm was buried near the pulpit at Haroldston Church.

In contrast one of his successors, Richard Lloyd achieved distinction within the established Church, Rector of Llangwm (1671) and Burton (1672) he eventually reached the elevated rank of Bishop of St David's (1686).

Fishing

Formerly famed for its oysters and still some people use compass netting for Salmon. This uses a net fixed to two poles which is lowered into the river on a rising tide and levered up smartly when the fisherman feels there is a fish in the net.

It was the women who made their living from the sea even it was said the Husbands were known by the names of their wives. No public house and strangers not welcome even preachers could be pelted with stones.

The fishwives walked miles carrying their peculiar shaped baskets of fish to sell in the towns and villages and there are photo's of them by St Catherines Rock in Tenby, but these hardy women have all died out.

Dolly and Mary Palmer were two of the most famous of them, and appear in some paintings. Dolly died at 90 after sustaining a broken leg, she had walked for years to Pembroke and Tenby twice a week. Mary reached 96, she used to carry baskets of oysters to Carmarthen 30 miles away returning the next day.

Black Tar cockles can still be dug but unfortunately due to the pollution in the Haven are no longer fit to eat. [As I found out].

There was also trade in transshipping coal

Llanhowel,

Acc to the Topographical Dictionary of Wales S Lewis 1839

Llanhowel (LLAN-Howel), a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Dewisland, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 4½ miles (E. by N.) from St Davids; containing 160 inhabitants. It is situated in the north-western part of the county, nearly in the centre of a peninsula stretching into St. George's Channel, and terminating in the promontory called St Davids Head. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Llandeloy annexed; patrons and impropriators, the Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral of St Davids. The tithes of Llanhowel have been commuted for £67 payable to the impropriators, and £42 payable to the vicar: the vicar's glebe comprises eighty-one acres, valued at £60 per annum. The Church, dedicated to St. Hoel, presents no details of importance.

The State of Education in Wales 1847

An agricultural parish, labourers receive 1s 2d a day on their own finding and 8d a day with food. There is no resident Clergyman or resident land proprietor.

Church St Hywel

Probable site of an early Celtic monastic community nave and chancel 12c north Chapel 14c renovated 1870's
5c stone with Latin inscription

Church first sited here in the sixth century, present Church dates to thirteenth century.

The Parish Church dedicated to St Hywel – RCAM.

The structure consists of nave 33 ½ ft by 15 ½ ft, chancel 15ft by 12 ½ ft and north Chapel 11 ½ ft by 9ft. A single Bell-cote crowns the west gable. The south doorway, windows and roof are modern. The chancel arch is plain pointed, as is that between the nave and the north Chapel. The latter is connected with the chancel by a diagonal passage 7ft broad. The Chapel has a plain vaulted roof, and its west wall is a small square recess. Facing the nave on either side of the chancel arch, and also on that leading into the transept, are plain corbels. The font basin is of the cushion type externally 21 in and internally 16in square. It is supported on a circular shaft with a square base, the total height being 28in. The opening of the Bell-cote to the east has been blocked, which gives the appearance of a niche or recess. visited 20th April 1921.

Acc/to The Old Parish Churches of South West Wales by Mike Salter 1994

The internal whitewashed nave and chancel with a plain round arch between them are Norman like the scalloped font with slight spurs at the base. The small north transept with a pointed tunnel vault and very wide squint is probably 13c.

Acc to Pembrokeshire Parsons

The earliest mention of this benefice is in the time of Bishop Beck, who is stated in the Statutes of St Davids to have purchased from Vachan ap Eedmor ap Philip, for one Mark of silver, all the interest which the latter had in certain lands in the vill of Llanhowell, together with one fourth part of the advowson of the Church there. The date of the union of this Church with Llandeloy is unknown, but it is quite possible that it occurred soon after 1302 when Bishop David Martin appropriated both churches to the Chapter of St Davids Cathedral. It is certain, however, that these livings were united in 1490, and continued so until 1907.

Under the name of 'Ecclesia de Lanowel,' this Church assessed at £6 for tenths to the King in 1291 the sum payable being 12s.—Taxito

[Bishop David Martin, with the consent of his Chapter, appropriated the Church of Lannowell in Pebydiaul:, in his own donation, to the Chapter of St Davids, and in Feb., 1307, he also appropriated the Church of Landelowe in Pebydi-auk to the same Chapter, with the proviso that the Church was not to be deprived of its proper services. Stat. Menev.

It would seem, however, that the Bishop relied on Sir John Wogan of Picton Knt., to get the necessary permit from the King for this appropriation, and this was not obtained till 25 Mar., 1313, when the nature of the appropriation was so changed, as to render it almost certain that of the original intention, which was to recompense the Chapter for an annual charge of £10 payable by the latter for the use of the Cathedral, that had been altered in view of an arrangement whereby Sir John Wogan endowed a chantry in the Cathedral. — Stat. Menev.

On 25 Mar., 1313, licence was granted by the King to David Martin Bishop of St Davids, for the alienation in mort-main of the advowsons of the two churches to the Precentor and Chapter of St Davids Cathedral, and for the chapter to appropriate the same for the sustenance of three chaplains to celebrate divine service in the Cathedral for the King's soul and the souls of his ancestors and successors, and for the souls of William de Valence and John Wogan and their heirs, although in the case of a voidance to the see, the King might lose the presentation of Llandeloy.

The accounts in 1490 of William Waryn, Communadus of the Cathedral of St Davids, show that at that date the tithes of Llanhowell and Llandeloy were leased to Henry ap Owen, at the yearly rent of £8. On 23 September., 1550, these tithes were leased to George Constantine and Thomas Lee, and on 4 Oct., 1555, Alexander Watkins obtained a lease of the tithes for 50 years at a rent of £11 to commence from the termination of the lease to Constantine and Lee. Presumably this lease was either surrendered or else did not take effect, as in 1565 the tithes were leased to Mr. George Pynde of Haverfordwest for 21 years. On 27 July, 1600, Morgan Bowen of Roblington, gent., took the tithes for 21 years at a yearly rent of £11 Thomas Picton seems to have been the next person to rent the tithes of these churches, but the date of his lease is not given, and in 1625 William Bouren held the tithes. In 1631 they were rented to William Thomas at £11 per annum, and in Nov., 1660, Phoebe Prichard of Poyston, spinster, leased the tithes for 21 years. This lease must have been surrendered, as on 26 July, 1662, she obtained a lease of the tithes for 21 years at the yearly rent of £15, for which she paid a fine of £20, and on 27 July, 1668, she again paid a fine of £20 to extend the lease for 21 years at the same rent. On 26 July, 1680, a lease of the tithes was granted to Rev. John Prichard of Yerbeston, and Elizabeth Prichard of Poyston, spinster, for 21 years at the yearly rent of £15, the fine paid being £40, and on 1687 the same Elizabeth Prichard again took the tithes for 21 years at the same rent. She renewed the lease in 1694 and 1707 at the same rent of £15, and a fine of £20 on each occasion.

In 1726 new tenants appeared in the shape of. John Hooke of Bangeston (the ancestor of Lord Cawdor) and Dame Elizabeth, Viscountess Bulkeley, his wife, who on 24 July, 1733, surrendered the old lease and obtained a new one for 21 years at £15 rent. This new lease was again renewed on 2nd July, 1757, for 21 years, by John Hook Campbell, the executor of the late John Hooke, deceased, a fine of £79 being paid for the privilege. On 27 July, 1771, the tithes were leased for 21 years to William Jones of Llether, in the parish of Brawdy, William Davies of Barry Island, in the parish of Llanrhian, and - Henry John, of Carwen, in the parish of Whitchurch in Dewslan, who had obtained a surrender of a lease granted to John Campbell Hooke in 1764, the fine paid on this occasion being £60. William Jones of Llether subsequently assigned his interest in the lease to his co-lessees, and they, on 25 July, 1786, obtained a new lease for 21 years at a rent of £15, on paying a fine of £70. Henry John, one of the lessees, died in 1791, and on 24 July, 1794, his personal representative, Francis John of Car-varchell, and William Davies of Barry Island, surrendered the previous leases and obtained a new one for 21 years at the same rent.. This lease was again renewed to the same lessees on 26 July, 1779, on the same terms, the fine paid being £60. In 1801 the same William Davies and Francis John leased from the Chapter two-thirds of the tithes of Llanhowell and Llandelow for 21 years at the yearly rent of £25, the fine paid being £200, and on 22 Aug., 1809, Francis John alone rented two-thirds of the same tithes for 21 years at a rent at £13 19s. In 1820 the same proportion of the tithes was leased to William Davies of Haverfordwest, and Francis John of Llandeloy parish, for 21 years at a fine of £42 7s. 1d., and a yearly rent of £14, and this lease was renewed to them at the same fine and rent in 1821, and again in 1825, the fine on the last occasion being £34 5s.

On 25 July, 1833, Francis John was dead, as on that date his executor, Thomas John, and his co-lessee, William Davies, are stated to have paid £34 1s. 8d., to the Chapter, being a portion of the fine for renewing the lease of the tithes of Llanhowell and Llandeloy.

The vicarage of Llanhowell was dis-united from Llandeloy under an Order in Council dated 11 May, 1906., and, by an Order in Council on 26 March , 1907, a portion of the parish of St Davids with the Chapel of ease of St. James the Great, Carnhedryn, was annexed to Llanhowell, the Rev. Hugh Evans being the first vicar of the united churches of Llanhowell and Carnhedren.

The cup is 6 in. in height; weight, 5 oz. 10 dwts. The stem is divided by a knop with a narrow fillet above and below. The Paten cover weighs 2 oz. 14 dwts.

Extracts from A History of the Church and parish of Llanhowell Richard Morvan Jenkins

It is probable that there has been a religious settlement at or near the present site of the Church since the sixth century. A recently discovered burial stone, reliably dated as being of the sixth century is evidence for the existence of a Christian community in the area at that period. The stone is inscribed RINACI NOMENA which, according to Dr. Nash Williams, indicates that "the remains of Rinacus lie here." It commemorates a Christian who lived and died in the fifth or early sixth century, and it was formerly used as a gatepost at Upper Carnhedryn Farm. (This stone is to be found beneath the west window of the Church).

It is to the reign of Bishop Bernard of St Davids (1115 - 1148) that we must look for the founding of the present Church. It was Bernard who organised the diocese of St Davids into four archdeaconeries based on the ancient Welsh kingdoms and established a system of rural deaneries based on the ancient "Cartrefs" of which Dewslan was one.

The present Church was probably built during the period 1115-1280. The earliest mention of the benefice is during the time of Bishop Beck (1280-1293) who is stated in the statutes of St Davids

"to have purchased from Vachan ap Kedmor ap Philip for one Mark of silver, all the interest which the latter had in certain lands in the vill of Llanhowell, together with one-fourth part of the advowson of the Church there."

The statutes of St Davids (Harley MSS. No. 1249 to 109) , quoted in west Wales Historical records Vol. 2, P. 247.

At this period the parish was clearly an Independent ecclesiastical unit for in the Taxatio of Pope Nicholas the parish, under the name of Ecclesia de Lanowel was assessed at £6 for tenths to the King in the year 1291 - the sum payable being twelve shillings. Taxatio

1302 it was united with the parish of Llandeloy to provide the necessary finances to endow the establishment of three chantry priests at the cathedral to say Mass for the soul of the King:

"Sir John Wogan, chief justiciary in Ireland in 1302 bound himself by covenant to produce license from King Edward 1 for the appropriate of Llandeloy and Llanhowell then held by the King in capite: to the chapter of St Davids at our own expense within three years under pain of refunding all that sum which he and his heirs have been expending on the chantry, with damages at the estimation of the Bishop, and then the chantry shall cease and all the instruments relating into it to be void."

In the year 1312 a Royal licence was granted by which David Bishop was empowered to assign to the Precentor and Chapter of St Davids: "the advowsons of Llandelowe and Lanowel for the support of three chaplains to officiate daily for the souls of William de Valencia and John Wogan and their heirs to the Church of St Davids"

"On the 1st of August 1498 (the feast of St. Peter ad Vinculem) Hugh Davy, the Bishop of St Davids received the sum of £8 for the Cathedral farms at Llanhowell and LLandiloe handed over by Henry ap Owen."

The parish was, in common with most others of the deanery, extremely poor during the 16th century, so much so that both in 1513 and 1517 it was exempted from the payment of the "four-tenths" and "two-tenths." This was a tax Levied by the Crown "for the defence and protection of the Anglican Church and this our famous realm of England as well as to allay and extirpate heresies and schisms in the Church universal." Episcopal Register of St Davids pp 789, 817.

The Church Building

The nave and chancel are probably of early 13th century construction. The vaulted north Chapel is probably a late 13th or 14th century addition, likely to have been built by a local landowner of some consequence. The passage giving a view of the altar in the chancel may have been added in the 15th century and the lead of the window in the north Chapel is of this date. The south wall of the nave has been rebuilt in a nineteenth century restoration when all the windows and roofs were rebuilt. Some corbels at the chancel arch indicate that there was formerly a Rood-loft at the east end of the nave. This was probably erected in the late 15th century and removed in the 16th century.

The font is plain and has a cylindrical stem with mouldings and would appear to be Transitional rather than Norman. The font basin is of the cushion type, externally 21 inches and internally 16 inches square. It is supported on a circular shaft with a square base. The total height being 28 inches.

The stone beneath the west window is a 6th century Christian burial stone and was removed from the Church of St. James, Carnhedryn when the Church was finally closed and sold in 1974. The stone bears the Latin inscription RINACI NOMENA which according to Dr. Nash-Williams indicates that "the remains of Rinacus lie here. It commemorates a Christian who lived and died in the fifth or early sixth century and was formerly used as a gate-post at Upper Carnhedryn Farm.

Leper Window

In the South-west corner of the Sacristy is the blocked-up remains of a former medieval leper window. through this window a view of the altar would have been obtained via the ambulatory on the north side of the chancel arch. The lepers could then both see and hear Mass being said and would receive the sacred host through the window at the time of the communion of the people.

The Pringle Memorial

The panel which forms the door to the aumbry in the north-east corner of the Church is entitled "The Donation" and was painted by Marguerite Hawkett. The episcopal figure, seated, is St. Teilo. The King, kneeling, is Aercol (Agricola) in whose father's reign St David was born, whilst behind the King stands the figure of Huel (or Howel) disciple of St. Teilo and patron of the Church.

The King was a good King and therefore much troubled by the ungodly and riotous behaviour of a number of his courtiers. The King sent for Teilo, that he might influence the court. When he came he was able by prayer and fasting to bring the court to good order. It is this bequest that is illustrated in the picture.

The memorial commemorates two members of the Pringle family generous benefactors of Llanhywel Church- Norman Douglas Pringle, Captain East Yorkshire Regiment, killed at Suvla Bay, August 10th, 1915 and Henry Brian Despard Pringle, Flying Officer, Royal Air Force, lost over Steinach Coburg, January 27th, 1944.

The memorial was the gift of the late Dr. Kenneth Pringle, whose ashes are interred in the churchyard near the east end of the Church. It was dedicated at Evensong on July 13th, 1952 by the Rt. Rev. William Prosser, Bishop of St Davids.

The shields depicted on the aumbry door are as follows.:

Lecha Cromlech

On Lecha Farm, to the west of the Church are the remains of a cromlech which would appear to have sunk into the soft soil from the weight of the capstone, though it is possible that it may have been damaged by wanton or careless marauders. The capstone measures some 15 feet by 11 feet and is about 4 feet thick. The Pem Arch Survey speaks of two mounds here, but only one exists at present –visited 19th April 1921.

Moat

About 200 yards south of Lecha Cromlech is a well preserved homestead site surrounded by a 10 foot wide moat which is still filled with a depth of water and mud that makes the enclosed area inaccessible to examination. The outside measurements of the work are 25yds by 24yds. The interior thus protected by the moat, and rising about 9ft clear of the water level, is covered with dense undergrowth. The water of the moat flows into the river Solva, a few yards north of the enclosure where it forms the boundary between the parishes of Llanhowel and Whitchurch. On the opposite bank of the river is llyn yr Alarch, “the swan's pool” now much silted up but formerly one of the features of the ruined mansion of Caerforiog in the neighbouring parish of Whitchurch. Of the Colomendy, or pigeon house, marked on the 6in sheet as having stood on a mound within the moat, no traces remain, nor were any foundations visible, some years ago, when an examination of the enclosure was made by Mr Henry W Evans of Solva –visited 19th April 1921.

Carn Treglemes. (Carn Fawr).

A prominent outcrop of natural rock in a field called Parc-y-Garn Fawr, nearly half a mile north-west of the parish Church,, which at one time was probably crowned with a cairn.

Treglemais Fawr

This estate, now a modern working farm is variously described in records as Villa Clementi, Clementson, Treglemes and Carn Fawr. It is mentioned as early as 1332 when it clearly had the status of an episcopal manor. In that year an enquiry was held to determine whether it would damage the King or any other person if Griffeth de Cartington granted to Bishop Gower (to enable him to pay £10 yearly to his chaplain to perform divine service in his Hospital of St David at Swansea) the Manors of Clementson, Nantgrove (Llanfair-nant-y gof) and Lettardiston (Llanychaer). The enquiry concluded that it would not damage anyone and that the lands in question were held of the Bishop and were worth £11 yearly. It remained an episcopal manor until 1584 but became a lay manor in 1587.

Shyfog (Ysgeifiog)

This was a lay manor and is mentioned as early as 1584 when it is recorded that Sir John Perrot, Lord Deputy of Ireland appointed attorneys to deliver possession to Sir Thomas Bromley, Lord Chancellor of England, and others the manor of Skeyvock. Sir John Perrot himself became Lord.

Llanllawer (Llanhawer),

The State of Education in Wales 1847

There is one resident land proprietor William Gwynne of Court and three farmers paying more than £100 rent per annum but no day school provision for education of the poor. Many of the population can read and write.

Topographical Dictionary of Wales 1839 Lewis

Llanllawer (LLAN-LLAWEN), a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Kemmes, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Fishguard; containing 114 inhabitants. This parish is pleasantly situated in the northern part of the county, and on the river Gwayn, which falls into Fishguard bay. It comprises 1163 acres, of which nearly one-third is mountainous, the remainder being inclosed and cultivated. The scenery is finely varied, combining features of picturesque beauty with mountains of rugged aspect; and the distant views extend over a remarkably interesting tract of country. Court House, in the parish, is a good family mansion, occupying an agreeable situation. The living is a rectory not in charge, annexed to the living of Llanerchllwydog; the Church is not remarkable for any architectural details. On the side of Llanllawer mountain, which terminates in a rocky point, and is hence called the Maiden's Breast, numerous Druidical relics and ancient carneddau are profusely scattered, supposed to have been places of sepulture; and adjoining is a mineral well, formerly in high repute for its efficacy in the cure of ague and other diseases, but now neglected.

1870-72, John Marius Wilson's Imperial Gazetteer of England and Wales

described Llanllawer like this:

LLANLLAWER, a parish in Haverfordwest district, Pembroke; on the river Gwayn, 2 miles ESE of Fishguard, and 12 NNW of Clarbeston-road r. station. Posttown, Fishguard, under Haverfordwest. Acres, 1,202. Real property, £687. Pop., 117. Houses, 21. Court House is a chief residence. Much of the surface is Hill. There are Druidical and other antiquities. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Llanychlwydog, in the diocese of St Davids.

Parish Church dedicated to St David

RCAM

This is a practically new Church on the foundations of an earlier one which had fallen into great decay, and was taken down in the year 1860, the old material being used for the new building. The Church calls for no description here, the only item of Archaeological interest preserved from the earlier building being the so-called "weeping stone" This occupies its original site at the ground level of the extreme north west angle of the nave. Partly hidden within a plain niche is a circular hollowed stone, doubtless once a stoup, 29 in in diameter, the basin itself being 11in across and 6in deep. The cavity holds about a gallon, and is said never to become dry. On the occasions of three surprise visits to it in the exceptional dry summer of 1915 the basin was full. An aged parishioner Mr Thomas of Parc Coitan Arthur, has no recollection of ever seeing it dry. visited August 1915

Incised Stones

In the churchyard wall, on either side of the entrance gate, are two stones, each bearing an incised cross, but showing no inscriptions. In their present position the backs and sides of the stones cannot be examined.

1] a round header slab 26in by 14 ½ in with a Latin cross 23in by 13 in.

2] an irregularly shaped slab 38in by 27 in bearing an incised Latin cross 20in by 14 in.

St David's Church, Llanllawer RCAHMW

St David's Church was a Chapelry during the post-conquest period, belonging to the Deanery of Cemais. It is home to four medieval cross-incised stones. Two are incorporated into the churchyard wall, with the other two incorporated into the present Church building. The pattern of one of the latter includes a linear Latin cross with a lozenge shaped ring at its upper end, and with stones at St Tecwyn's Church, Llandecwyn, St Tanwg's Church, Llandanwg and St Sulien's Church, Silian is one of only four examples in Wales. Llanllawer Holy Well also known as Ffynnon Gapan is located some 40m north-east of the Church. The well reportedly had a reputation for its miraculous healing powers, and was reputedly particularly effective in curing sore eyes. In 1998 the Church had been redundant for some years.

The form of the medieval Church building is unknown. It was entirely rebuilt in 1860, on the same location as its predecessor, but retaining nothing from the earlier fabric.

The current Church is constructed of limestone and slate rubble. It consists of two-bayed chancel, wider two-bayed nave, vestry (north of the chancel) south porch and west single bellcote. There is a re-used stoup set within a niche in the north-west angle of the nave. It is filled by a spring which permeates up through the Church walls.

Inscribed Stones, St David's Church, Llanllawer RCAHMW

This group of stones is scheduled, and includes four cross-incised pillar stones, two of which are set either side of the churchyard gate, the other two being built into the fabric of St David's Church. The former are both thought to date to the ninth-eleventh century. One of the latter, also thought to date to this time, is built into the external west vestry wall. It is decorated with a linear Latin cross with a lozenge shaped ring at its upper end. It is one of only three definite examples in Wales. The fourth stone is thought to be ninth-tenth-century in date.

The Church has been rebuilt but has at one corner a "weeping stone" ie. a spring said to never run dry.

Redundant Church Church of St David, Llanllawer
at Llanllawer was for sale in 2012 at £25,000.--

Sale description:-

Standing in a commanding position above the Gwaun valley and within sight of Mynydd Dinas, this Victorian reconstruction replaced a C12/13. Church, itself probably built on a pre-Christian sacred site. Nearby is a Holy Well and there is also a small water-fill hollow under the north wall of the Church. On either side of the entrance gate are pillar stones with engraved crosses and the graveyard is a roughly circular shape suggesting ancient origin.

Pembrokeshire Parsons.

This benefice, originally a Chapel, has always been appendant to the barony of Kemes, and in 1594 it was annexed to Llanychllwyddog Chapel. - (Owen's Pem.)

No valuation of this benefice is given in the Valor Eccl., and Bacons Liber Regis contains only the following brief reference under the heading 'Not in Charge':- Llanllawer Chapel.

The earliest institution to Llanllawer of which there is record is of Peter Lewis, who also held Llanychllwyddog. From that date all subsequent incumbents held both benefices.

Holy Well RCAM

In the enclosure of Ymyl yr Eglwys “the churchyard precincts” just outside the churchyard wall to the north east, is the well noted by Fenton (tour 570) as “a sainted well abundantly supplied with the purest water, that once had the reputation of most miraculous efficacy in various disorders, and was consequently much frequented; but of late years its virtues got into disrepute, or the popular faith in them so weakened that the visitors and votive offerings are very few.” On the day of the inspection the well was much overgrown and the flow of water weak. The spring is enclosed by a chamber or well head of rough masonry measuring 6 ½ ft from the rudely vaulted crown to base; it is evidently constructed for total immersion. The Rev T G Mortimore , a recent vicar recollected people resorting to the well “and if they wished good they threw in straight pins, and if evil, crooked pins. The water was supposed to be good for sore eyes and when resorted to by a man from Fishguard he threw in a coin as an oblation “ (Pem Arch Survey) – visited 17th August 1915

Llanllawer Well; Ffynnon Gapan, Llanllawer RCAHMW

Llanllawer holy well, also known as Ffynnon Gapan, is located some 40m north-east of St David's Church, Llanllawer. Thought to have been constructed for bodily immersion, the well reportedly had a reputation for its miraculous healing Properties, and was especially renowned for curing sore eyes. Coins and pins were reputedly thrown into the well as offerings, and bent pins were thrown in as curses.

The stone well chamber is a Scheduled Ancient Monument. It measures some 3.5m x 1.5m, and the chamber is corbelled to a pointed arch. In 1966 the well was noted to have dried up.

Mynydd Llanllawer, Pillow Mound RCAHMW

The mound, which is composed of mixed grade stones and overgrown with heather and gorse, measures 13.7m Long (NW-SE) by 3.8m wide with a height of about 1m. It is flanked on its Long sides by shallow ditches, no more than 0.2m deep.

The appearance of the mound, Long, thin and sharply profiled, is typical of late pillow mounds. Its location close to the interface between farmland and open common would be consistent with Post-Medieval, say 18th century, attempts at rabbit farming. visited DKL 26.2.96

Parc Y Marw Alignment

The earliest notice of this alignment would seem to be the following by Rev E L Barnwell:-

In the north part of Pembrokeshire is a single line of stones of great size which Fenton does not mention although he deliberately pulled to pieces a fine cromlech near it [?Coitan Arthur, – Fenton died in 1821 and this cromlech was not razed until 1844] and which seems to have been connected with this row of stones, for it was probably continued further northwards than at present. On referring to the Ord. Map, a little to the right of the work 'Lanllawer' will be seen the position of the line called on the map 'parc y marw'(field of the dead). And a little further to the east, but slightly to the north, is marked down the cromlech .. of which only some small fragments remain. The line of stones is parallel to the narrow road, and if continued would pass within a few paces of the ruined cromlech. Here the name points to the character of the monument; for experience has shown that local names of this kind in Wales, handed down from time immemorial, may be generally depended upon. Local tradition, however, adds an account of a desperate battle fought on the spot among the pillar stones themselves. The height of the stones is not so striking, as their lower part is embedded in the tall bank of earth that the duty of an ordinary hedge, but some of them are full 16ft Long.. There are no traces to be discovered of any second or other lines of stones...

Our Officer, on the date of inspection, was fortunate in having the personal guidance of Mr Samuel Thomas (age 75) of Parc Coitan Arthur, who has a lifelong knowledge of this district, and takes a special interest in the site. All the stones have somewhat square tops, with the exception of N02 which is pointed. Two have fallen in the lifetime of Mr Thomas, but that gentleman had no knowledge of some "incised curious lines which are not modern work," said Mr Barnwell to have been seen by him on one of the stones, and which Laws describes as "a horseshoe-shaped Mark, evidently made by man, and seemingly not recent" --They could not be found by our Inspector -- visited 17th August 1915.

Coitan Arthur

This stone known as Coitan Arthur, Arthur's Quoit -- probably the capstone or supporter of a demolished cromlech stood in a field appurtenant to the farm of Trellwyn ucha. It was destroyed about the year 1844. "The Rev T G Mortimore remonstrated with the destroyer, and with a view of inducing him to desist reminded him of the old saying that ill luck befell those who destroyed the Druid's altars. Some years afterwards the vandal admitted that the house he had built of the stones had not brought him good luck!" (Pem Arch Survey) -- visited 17th August 1915

Parc caer

A Field on the farm of Court, a name that probably belongs to the period of Welsh land tenure, and that may have itself succeeded a site of tribal gatherings. There is now no appearance of antiquarian interest -- visited 17th August 1915.

Parc y garn and Maenllwyd

On the farm of Pen y mynydd. The names point to former monuments of which no signs at present remain. The maenllwyd may be a natural object. visited 17th August 1915.

Parc Maenhir

A field on the farm of Trellwyn with no sign of a standing stone visited 17 August 1915.

Rocking stone

At the spot indicated on the northern boundary of the parish, the Pem Arch Survey locates a Rocking Stone "which has not been thrown out of balance" It is not marked on the 6in Ord sheet and our Inspecting Officer was not able to discover it. To the east of the above site the Ord sheet prints "Piles of Stones" the usual heaps marking the line of demarcation between adjoining parishes. visited 17th August 1915.

Parc y Marw.

The field next west to the alignment is marked on the 6in Ord sheet as the site of an antiquity though nothing visible on the ground to justify the description. The tradition still current in the locality as to the spot, is that "a lady, clad all in white appears to those who are rash enough to walk that way by night; and so ancient is this tradition .. That a short distance from the stones, a footpath by long use become public, turns across the fields to the left making a detour of nearly a mile before it leads again into the road. During daytime the peasants do not think it necessary to take the roundabout course. Arch Camb.

It is an agricultural parish with labourers receiving 6d a day with food and 1s a day on their own finding

Lampeter Velfre

Lampeter.(Llanbedr) Velfry. 'Velfry' represents' the earlier 'Evelfre,' the name of a small principedom which appears to have been ruled by Independent chiefs. It covered Lampeter, Llanddewi and Crinow Acc/to South Pembrokeshire Place Names -- P Valentine Harris

RCAM Note

-- Velfrey, in the name Llanbedr Velfrey and in the adjoining parish, Llanddewi Velfrey, represents an earlier Evelfre, which was the name borne by a small autonomous principedom that seems to have been ruled by an Independent line of chiefs at a very remote period. It comprised the area of the present parishes of Llanbedr (usually written and pronounced Lampeter) velfrey, Llanddewi Velfrey , Crinow, and perhaps parts of Ludchurch and Cronware

The Pembrokeshire Coast National Park by Dillwyn Miles

The name means "the Church of St Peter in Efelfre" a district in the Welsh hundred of Cantref Gwarthaf and, later, in the lordship of Narberth. The parish Church is dedicated either to Pedyr, a Welsh saint or to the apostle Peter.. It was restored in 1862 and has a number of memorials, including a Jacobean altar tomb in the Lady Chapel.

At one time it was said that the Ark came to rest at Blaengwaith Noah but the name is a corruption of Blaen Gwyddno "the source of the Gwyddno". there is a promontory fort overlooking the Gwyddno valley and a Hill fort nearby at Castell Meherin.

Six roads meet at Tavenspite where there was a hospice for pilgrims travelling to St David's. The Milford Mail changes horses at the Plume of Feathers. Fulke Grenville fought a duel here with John Jones of Ystrad against whom he had lost the election of 1831.

Lampeter-Velvrey (LLAN-BEDR-FELFRE), a parish, in the union and hundred of Narberth, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 3 miles (E.) from Narberth; contains 1025 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated in the rich and fertile Valle of Lampeter, and on the south side of the river Marlais, extends for nearly six miles from east to west, and about three miles from north to south. The surrounding scenery is pleasingly varied; and the place, which is of considerable antiquity, contains several objects of historical interest. Limestone is found in abundance, and is quarried for building purposes, and also burnt into lime as manure for the supply of the neighbouring country. The living is a rectory, rated in the King's Books at £10, and in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £470; the glebe comprises 33a. 2r. 28p., valued at £30 per annum, and there is a glebe-house. The Church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a very ancient structure, consisting of two aisles separated by plain pointed arches; in the north aisle is an altar- tomb to a member of the Philipps family, of Lampeter House. There are places of worship for Baptists and Independents, with a Sunday school held in each of them; also a very handsome building erected as a day school through the exertions of the Rev. William Seaton, the rector, in 1845. John Jones, M.D., in 1698, bequeathed certain lands and tenements for the relief of poor families, and for apprenticing children of the parishes of Lawrenny, Cosheston, St Davids, and Lampeter-Velvrey, now producing a considerable sum annually, which is distributed in proportion to the number of deserving objects in the different parishes; the ratio for this place being two-sevenths, and the sum for distribution among the poor generally, £30, which is partly divided between decayed farmers and poor widows not receiving parochial relief, in sums of from £4 to £10, and partly applied to apprenticing children, the usual premium being £4.

A posting-inn at the entrance of the county from Carmarthen, distinguished by the name Tavern Spite, occupies the site of the ancient "Tavarn y Spytyty," an hospitium that belonged to Whitland Abbey, upon the bank of the river Tâf; and Blaengwyddno, now a farmhouse, was the Grange of that religious establishment. To the south-west of the latter place are some very extensive earthworks, called Castell Meherin, on the summit of a high ridge commanding a full view of the sea, and forming one of a chain of forts continued in a north-western direction along this part of the coast; and in a field adjoining the turnpike-road, a little to the north-east, are two semicircular embankments, commanding the passage of three several valleys .

 "Ivy on the wall of the cross asle & at the east end of the body of the Church over the Chancell Roof, & at the east end of both the Chancells, together with the Elder under the north wall of the Church & in other places to destroy'd, & the walls to be new pointed. The Chancell windows to be glaz'd. The floor there & in the Church to be made even. The Fence of the Churchyard to be repair'd. 'Tis said that the Minister had mony about two years since to repair the Parsonage house, which is yet unrepair'd.

The Thatch in some parts of the outhouses is quite worn away, & the Timbers expos'd to the weather. The Minister Mr Harris is not resident. He was or is Chaplain to the Regiment that was my Ld. Charlemonts. This gives him a colourable excuse for non-residence & instead of being with his Regiment, I hear he is at London in hopes of getting a Lecture there. His Curate is Mr David Lewis. Three Sundays in the month the Sermons are preach'd in English, the fourth in Welsh. Mr Powel preaches the Welsh Sermon in Mr Lewis's stead. No Dissenters. The Sacrament is administred at Christmas, Easter & Whitsuntide. Bread & Wine found by the Clark except at Easter, & then the Minister is at the charge of it. At Easter there are about forty Communicants. Twenty three poor people can Read Welsh. Above 100 Families in the Parish"

Parish Church dedicated to St Peter RCAM

This Church was restored in the year 1867. It consists of two parallel chambers 61ft by 18 ½ ft, a north tomb recess, a south porch and a single Bell-cot above the west gable of the north aisle. There is no constructive division between nave and chancel. The nave and aisle are connected by five Early English arches springing from circular masonry piers; the easternmost and westernmost arches are not so wide as the three middle ones. The north chamber, now occupied by an Organ, is separated from the aisle by a plain pointed arch. The windows, south porch, and Bell-cote are modern. At the east end of the south wall is a 17th century altar -tomb of the family of Phillips of Lampeter. The font is of the usual square type 23ins by 22 ins with a circular basin 19in in diameter and traces of a cover. It slopes off to a square pillar. In the churchyard is the base of a cross, with modern shaft and head; also a portion of a crosshead, 23in by 19 in., having the upper vertical arm broken off, probably part of the original churchyard cross.---visited 21st May 1918.

1847 Report of the Commission on Education in Wales (The Blue Book) Lampeter Velfry

Parish of Lampeter Velfrey – Mr David Morgan of Ventor Inn Farm informed me that labourers wages in this parish a 10d a day with food and 1s to 1s 2d without; carpenters and masons, with food 1s 6d without 2s; farm servants this year get from £4 to £12., female servants from £1 to £4 a year. There is gratuitous education for the poor in this parish, yet there are many, owing to the poverty or negligence of the parents, without daily instruction. The Church Catechisms learnt and the children are expected to go to Church on Sundays. The people are steady and temperate in general. Respectable farmers are well educated for country purposes, but many small farmers are quite illiterate. There is a growing desire among all classes now for education.

December 8th 1846 Wm Morris Assistant.

School at Tavernspite in this parish is held in a very handsome Gothic building, erected at the expense of the present Rector, with the aid of a grant from the Committee of Council. The schoolhouse, from its commanding position and dimensions, is quite a landmark for the country round. It is built in a locality where schools are much wanted; the adjacent parishes of Llangan, Cyffic and Cronware having no day-school in them. At the time when I purposed visiting Tavernspite, there was so deep a snow that no children could come to school, and, at the only other period when I could have visited it, the Christmas holidays would not be over for three weeks.

Parkeison School

- This school is kept in the room of a dwelling house situated on the road from Narberth to Tavernspite. The floor was quite out of repair, as were the window and partition. The furniture in the room consisted of three benches, a few old stools, a table, and a variety of articles for domestic use. There was a good fire in the grate. The mistress is 84 years of age, but appeared a hale person; she "says" that she never yet applied for parochial relief. George Allen esq., of Kilrhew, pays her 26s a year for the tuition of three poor children, and had promised, she said, to give her a house and garden rent free next year. She could Read tolerably well. The scholars are labourers' children and they Read better than I expected considering the advanced age of the teacher, but they could tell nothing of what they had Read.

December 8th 1846 Wm Morris Assistant

Redford Dame School

– The house in which this school is held is in good repair, as is also the room occupied by the scholar. It contained two tables, a chest of drawers, three benches, and a great many things for domestic use. Everything was very clean and neat. The mistress had newly commenced school keeping. She also sold tobacco and appeared to live well.

The scholars are labourers' children; hardly any could Read in the Testament. Questions on the lesson were quite strange to them, nor had they any idea of finding out answers from the portion read in the 19th chapter of St John. Copy books were ill written.

There seems to be some confusion in various records regarding this boy but what is evident is that the Jury and Judge took a very strong view of this case There was no recommendation to mercy or reduction in sentence to transportation as happened in many other recorded cases of the time It was a public hanging and that his body was hanged in chains after would also suggest that the case raised a lot of feeling as again this was unusual. In fact he was the last juvenile to be hung in chains-----The Court records state that David Dackfield from the parish of Narberth in the county of Pembroke by trade a Cordwainer that is a high class shoe maker murdered Anne Morgans daughter of John Morgan a clothier who lived at Lampeter Velfrey on the 1st February 1801 by hitting her on the head with as stone Anne Morgans was eleven years old and David Dackfield was in the court records age 17 The murder took place at Lampeter Velfrey -----David Dackfield pleaded not guilty at his trial but was found guilty and hanged at the Bowling Green Haverfordwest in Pembrokeshire on the 6th of April 1801. Afterwards his body was hanged in chains at Tavernspite cross roads. His execution and Gibbeting cost Pembrokeshire £20 -7s - 4d

"In 1801 a lad not more than fifteen of the name of David Duckfield was hanged for the murder of a little girl. Of those who witnessed the execution I conversed with one lady who is still living who was brought by her Father as if he thought it might prove a useful deterrent lesson for a little maid under ten She was horrified with the shrieks of the boy entreating the bystanders to save him while the hangman was endeavouring to soothe him while putting the rope round his neck addressing him as "My poor boy come now! 'tunc now that's a good boy "

Crug Y Swllt RCAM

This is a burial mound situated about 500 yds south west of Tafarn Spite, and within a few yards of the county boundary. It was examined by Fenton, whose account is as follows:-

'A large tumulus , an excrescence but rarely seen in this vicinity, which I alighted to explore . Having mustered what labourers I could, a proportional opening was made in the centre ... By way of encouragement I laid hold of a pickaxe, and at the first blow striking near the outer edge of the section, I was so unfortunate as to fall on the urn and break it in two, a thing most unexpected and quite contrary to what is usual; it lay within a few inches of the outer sward and with its mouth up. It was not of a large size, very rude, totally unornamented, and of rather an uncommon form, being Bell shaped. It contained some fragments of ill-calcined bonesAfter going down for about 5 feet, we came to an immense bed of charcoal, that ended in a large irregular cist branching out in various directions, full of ashes and burned bones, as if it had been a family mausoleum.... I was under the necessity of abandoning the pursuit, satisfied that we had not come in contact with the primary internment. The tumulus is called by the country people Crug y swllt, literally the “heap of the shilling”; but I presume ‘swllt’ may be a corruption of Essylly or some such word (Tour 475)' The mound is now grass grown, and still exhibits marks of the disturbance by Fenton. It has a base circumference of 270 feet is 5ft high and somewhat bowl shaped in form. It is locally stated that not very long ago, what is described as “an old sword” was found in it; enquiries as to the present whereabouts of this object has led to no result. The mound was used in the early 18th century as the site of a gibbet.

In an adjacent field to Crug y swllt, called Parc y Garreh Lwyd, stood a maernhir until a few years ago, when it was broken up: some of the ‘debris’ is scattered around . This may probably be identified with the site of which Fenton, continuing his account of Crug y swllt says :-

A little to the south east of the tumulus, in the centre of an oval enclosure formed by a faint earthen agger, similar to those surrounding what on the Wiltshire downs is termed a Druid’s barrow. Lay a large stone flat on the ground, about 18 feet long, four feet broad and about 2 feet in average thickness in a place quite destitute of stones, towards which led a pitched avenue like an old Roman road, still to be traced as far as the turnpike the whole length of the field, notwithstanding the cultivation the field seems to have undergone for ages. Of the pitched avenue no trace remains above ground – visited 20th May 1915.

Newhouse Tumulus RCAM

This is the more easterly of two mounds, the second 50yds to the south west being in the Parish of Ludchurch. In circumference it measures about 300 ft and in height 4 feet. It is bowl shaped like its companion, but has been reduced by ploughing – visited 20th May 1915

Llan Cromlechs

On a field known as Parc Y Garreg, about 100yds due south of a schoolhouse, and 500yds east of Llan mill, are the remains of at least three cromlechs. A writer in Pem Arch Survey states that he remembered this place some thirty years previously when there were ‘several complete cromlechs’ What is now visible are the remains of a group of certainly three structures. That to the north consists of four stones, one 6ft in length, prostrate, and recently broken at one end; a second stone , about 2ft above the ground, and two stones of similar height in close proximity to each other. About 180 ft to the southwest are portions of another cromlech comprising one erect stone 3ft high 5ft in length and one foot thick; one other erect stone 3 ft above ground and 18 inches thick; and by their side, a prostrate boulder, probable a capstone 9 ½ feet by 3 ½ ft broad. Distant 25 ft from the last cromlech is a third consisting of four stones all prostrate, and partially buried in the soil.—visited 21 st May 1923

Blaen Gwyddno Camp RCAM

A well preserved promontory camp, situated on a tongue of land at the junction of two valleys . The camp is defended on the east and west by steep banks which fall to the streams that flow on either side of the earthwork and unite at the foot of the promontary. The defence on the south consists of a double line of ramparts and ditches. Each bank has a length of about 180 feet. The inner rampart rises some 5ft from the level of the enclosed area and falls 7 ft to a ditch 5ft deep and 10ft broad. The outer bank rises to 10ft and drops some 12ft to a ditch now partially filled in. The enclosed area has a length from north to south of 150 ft and from east to west of 130ft. The slopes, which are clothed with dense wood have been scarped at the point. The ramparts have been disturbed but the entrance can be made out at the west end. The interior of the camp has a slight slope to the north. The field to the west is known as Park Castle – visited 28th April 1915.

Old Castle RCAM

This mound Castle is situated about 180yds north of the parish Church; it shows no sign of a Bailey. The mound rises to a height of 12 ft. The summit is 120 ft in diameter, and has a depression in the centre. The surrounding ditch is now considerably filled in; it is seen at its best on the west where the counter-scarp has a height of 6ft. The whole structure is densely covered with vegetation. Lieut- Colonel W Ll Morgan., an ex Commissioner, suggests that this motte has probably been cut down, and the squat appearance, as well as the unusual summit-breath, makes the suggestion probable. The farm is locally called Castell Cynen or Cynon – visited 21st May 1915

Parc y maen Llwyd RCAM

A field on the farm of Allt y baily which may have been part of the demesne of Whitland Abbey; it doubtless at one time contained a maen Llwyd.

Parc y garn RCAM

There is now no trace of a cairn on this field which is part of the farm of Llantydwell – visited 21st May 1915

Trefgarn RCAM

This is an ancient name mentioned in the donation charter of Blaen gwyddno to Whitland Abbey. There was probably a notable cairn in this neighbourhood which gave its name to the tref within which it stood – visited 21st May 1915

Tafarn Spite RCAM

This is the name of a hamlet close on the county boundary, where probably a place of public entertainment for man and beast has stood from early medieval times – visited 20th May 1915

Llanreithan , Llanrhian, Llanrheithan

Extracts from Llanrheithan by Mjr Francis Jones (Wales Herald Extraordinary)

The parish of Llanrheithan lies in the far west of Pembrokeshire, in the depths of the Hundred of Dewslan, midway between the sheltered cove of Aber Castell on the north, and the inlet of Solva on the south. Although about four miles from the coast, the pounding of Atlantic breakers on the pebbled ramparts of Newgale can occasionally be heard clearly in the inland farms and cottages, such music being the invariably the harbinger of rain and violent tempests. It is a purely agricultural community, an open wind swept area of fairly even surface, without Hill, valley or woodland to break the uniformity of the scene, and without village, Chapel school or tavern to divert its inhabitants, No fort or ivied ruin recalls the historical past, and hardly any echoes of stirring events survive to enliven the chronicle of this sequestered parish. Although outwardly, the Church preserves the Celtic form of ecclesiastical architecture, it has been “restored” so mercilessly that all traces of its undoubted antiquity have been totally obliterated.

Even the holy well of the parish, dedicated to our patron saint is so overgrown that its location is known only to a few of the older inhabitants. The only token of the primitive past is a wheel cross incised on a boulder set in the hedgerow at mesur y dorth but owing to boundary adjustments this mute witness no longer lies within the confines of Llanrheithan

The Topographical Dictionary of Wales - S. Lewis 1839

Llanreithan (LLAN-RHIDIAN), a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Dewisland, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 4 miles (N. E. by E.) from Solva; contains 182 inhabitants. This parish, which derives its name from the dedication of its Church, is situated in the northwestern part of the county, and comprises some fertile tracts of land, inclosed and in a good state of cultivation. The surrounding scenery, though in general pleasing, is not distinguished by any peculiarity from that which prevails generally in this part of the principality. The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant; net income, £86; patrons and impropriators, the Subchanter and Vicars Choral of the Cathedral Church of St Davids, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent- charge of £102

The Parish Church dedicated to St Reithan RCAM

The Church was rebuilt in 1858 on earlier foundations; the architectural details and fittings are new.

The only ancient feature is the font , which is of the cushion type and measures externally 21 ½ in. and internally 19 in square. It stands on a circular shaft and a square modern base. visited 27th April 1921.

St Rheithan's Church is a small stone-built structure with pointed windows & lateral doorway, consisting of nave, chancel & Bell-cote. It is close by & associated with Llanreithan House, a gentry house from at least the C16th. RCAHMW

2007 Llanreithan Church disused and abandoned in its churchyard adjoining Llanreithan House, all trace of its medieval origins were lost in Victorian restoration . A foundation stone dated 1493 that was discovered during the rebuilding has subsequently vanished too and all that remains from earlier times is a cross-shaped stone set in the altar. The side door has been left open to the elements, birds and all-comers: the interior of the building is in a very dilapidated state and the damp is making rapid inroads. The churchyard is also neglected

2010 After being deconsecrated and lying abandoned for a while, the Church was purchased for conversion into a private residence. The restoration and conversion of the building was the subject of television programme Restoration Man broadcast in the UK on Channel 4 on 28 March 2010.

Pembrokeshire Parsons.

This benefice seems to have been at a very early date in the patronage of the Bishop of St Davids.

A statute of Bishop Richard de Carew states that Bishop Thomas Wallensis, who occupied the see in 1248-1256, granted to each deacon vicar choral of St Davids Cathedral an annual stipend of two marks, and each subdeacon vicar choral 20s. yearly (besides the small tithes and half of the produce [proventus] of the Church of Llanrheithan), and this grant was confirmed by Bishop Richard Carew.

— Menev

In 1594 the living is described as a curacy, of which the vicars choral of St Davids' Cathedral were the rectors. — (Owen's Pem.)

No particulars of this living are given in the Valor Eccl., but the following information is given under the heading 'Not in Charge,' in Bacons Liber Regis:- Llanrhythian arias.

Llanrheithan V. (St. Rheanus). Vicars Choral of St Davids Patr. and Impr. £4 certified value.

Prior to Dec., 1727, the tithes of Llanrheithan and Manorowen were held on lease by Thomas Jones of Brawdy, at the annual rent of £20, and on the 1st of that month he renewed the lease at the increased rent of £29, but the Lower Chapter agreed to provide curates for the two parishes. About the year 1740 the Rev. John Edwardess then subchanter of the cathedral, obtained a lease for lives of the tithes of the same two parishes and on the death of Mrs. Barlow of Rosepool, Pems., one of the lives in the lease, Mr. Frands Edwardess (the son and one of the executors of Rev. John Edwardess, the lessee) applied to the Lower Chapter for the insertion of a new life in the lease. This request was refused, but the Lower Chapter offered, if the old lease were surrendered to grant him a lease for 21 years renewable during the lives of the majority of the then vicars choral, on payment of a fine of 24 guineas. This offer was deleted, and presumably the lessee continued to hold the tithes until his lease expired. The next mention of a letting occurs in 1828, when Johnny Harding Harries [of Trevacoa, Pems.] paid a fine of £180 for renewing the lease of the tithes of Llanrheithan and Manorowen. Nov., 1843, the same lessee paid £255 as a fine for renewing the lease and in 1857 a fine of £225 was paid by the same tenant for a renewal. For the last time the lease was renewed on 27 Jan., 1872, by George Harries of Rickeston, Pems., eldest son of John Harding Harries, the last lessee.

The curacy of Llanrheithan was united to the vicarage of Llanrhian by an Order in council on 13 Aug. 1877. On 11th May, 1906 these two benefices were disunited under an Order in Council. On 26 Mar., 1907, an Order in Council was obtained uniting Llanreithan with the vicarage of Llandeloy.

Llanrheithan (S. Rheithan). — A Chalice, similar in shape and ornamentation to the one at Mathry, but a little larger and of parcel gilt. The Hall Mark indicates the year 1674 with the maker's I S linked as in O. E. P. at 1675. The bowl is of beaker shape, 4 in. deep, and is supported by a trumpet-shaped stem and base measuring 3 in. high. Around the base of the bowl is a band of cable moulding. Like the Mathry cup it carries a pricked inscription but in English, " the Parish Church of Llanrithan ". The obliterated words are doubtless " The Cup of " Height, 6 in. ; diam. of bowl, 3 in. ; diam. of base, 3 in. ; weight, 6 oz. 5 dwts. A chalice at Llanllowell, Monmouth, is by the same maker, of the same year and of like pattern.

A modern Paten, Hall marked 1883 and inscribed "Llanreithan Church 1884"; diam., 5 in.; weight, 4oz. 7 dwts.

A pewter Bowl (See Llanstinan), 7 in. in diam. and 1 in. in height. It carries the Mark "LONDON" and underneath is rudely scratched "R Fry "; " James Evans ". — There is also a pewter Plate, 8 in. in diam., with no marks.

Extracts from Llanrheithan by Mjr Francis Jones (Wales Herald Extraordinary) Llanrheithan House

Of the old mansion of Llanrheithan, not a trace remains above ground. It has disappeared from the face of the earth. It stood a little to the north of the Church, and near the river, on the left side of the drive leading to the present farmhouse. The walled garden between the site and the Church is the sole remnant of squirearchal dignity.

From the fact that the proprietor was assessed at five hearths in the Hearth Tax List of 1670, it was clearly a sizable house certainly the largest in the parish. Taken down early in the 19th century, its materials were used for enlarging the farmhouse and outbuildings.

The farmhouse consisting of thirteen rooms on the ground floor and a similar number on the upper stands on a gentle knoll immediately above the site of the old mansion. The 'best' part of the house was built during the early 1800's but the kitchen, dairy and other offices retain traces of a much earlier period.

Mesur y Dorth

Built into the wall on the side of the high road from Fishguard to St David's about 50 yds north east of the farm house of Mesur y Dorth is a stone bearing an equal armed incised cross within a circle, and having the lower limb continued 6in below the circle. The cross is formed of two grooved lines with a space of 2in between them. The circle, which is irregularly drawn is of only one line. There is no form of decoration beyond the incised lines. --visited 7th July 1920.

Llanrhian

Originally part of the Cantref of Pebediog (later Dewisland Hundred) granted in perpetuity to the Bishops of St Davids in 1082, the manors of Llanrhian, Castle Morris and Priskilly were, prior to 1175, granted to Maurice FitzGerald by his brother, David FitzGerald, second Norman approved Bishop of St Davids. They then remained with FitzGerald's descendants, by then settled in Ireland, until 1302 when Sir John Wogan, Chancellor of St Davids and Lord Justiciar of Ireland bought out the remaining FitzGerald interests in all three manors. Castle Morris and Priskilly were returned to the bishopric. But Llanrhian appears to have remained in the Wogan family until the 17th century when it passed by marriage into the Le Hunte family of Artramont. The Le Hunte's then in turn retained Llanrhian manor until the 1880s when it was sold to Henry Prosser, ancestor of the present owner.

Topographical Dictionary of Wales - S. Lewis 1839

Llanrian (Llan-Rhian) 1839 Lewis

Llanrian (LLAN-Rhian), a parish, in the poor-law union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Dewisland, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 5 miles (N. E.) from St Davids; contains 912 inhabitants. It is situated near the north-western extremity of the county, and on the coast of St. George's Channel, by which it is bounded on the west and north; the scenery is pleasing, and the views over the Channel and the adjacent country are interesting and extensive. The living is a discharged vicarage, rated in the King's Books at £6. 11. 3., and endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant; present net income, £105; patron, the Bishop of St Davids. The Church, dedicated to St. Rheanus, is not remarkable for any architectural details of importance. There are places of worship for Baptists and Calvinistic Methodists. A day school is endowed with £9 a year, the interest of money left by the late Mr. David Thomas, of Trevyne, towards the support of a schoolmaster; and with £3 a year from the executors of the late Mrs. Davies, of Carnachan- wen. Of four Sunday schools, one is in connexion with the Established Church. Near the Church are some Druidical remains, consisting of many large stones, most of them now broken: they were formerly erect, and, in their arrangement and general appearance, formed in miniature, according to Mr. Fenton, a tolerably correct representation of Stonehenge.

The Pembrokeshire Coast National Park by Dillwyn Miles.

The stepped gables and pitched roof of the tower of the Church give it the appearance of a stronghold. The rest was rebuilt in 1836, and restored extensively in 1891. Complaints about the dilapidation of the chancel were made in the early part of the 15c. The Church is dedicated to an unknown saint Rhian or Rheian. The decagonal font has an inverted shield on each face, one of which bears a chevron between three ravens, the arms of Sir Rhys ap Thomas, whose descendants lived at nearby Rickeston.

Church St Rhian Fenton published 1811

Passed by Lanrian, formerly a prebendal Church, but now a vicarage, the rectorial tithes being annexed to the archdeaconry of Carmarthen. The Church, unlike those in its vicinity, and everywhere throughout Dewisland, bears a sort of stunted tower, and has a nave divided by a row of low pillars, near one of which I formerly recollect to have seen a mutilated effigy of a priest, as then having had a removal and no determined settlement assigned to it, but now nowhere found. The font is wrought into several compartments, one of which is occupied by an escutcheon (perhaps of the donor) bearing a chevron between three birds, but whether martlets or choughs, the whole being whitewashed, and the sculpture otherwise blunted cannot be ascertained; if the latter, the arms of Urien Rheged, the font might have been the gift of Sir Rhys ap Thomas, or some of his descendants of the house of Riskeston in this neighbourhood. On the south wall a neat marble tablet commemorates John Harries, esq., of Cryglas, whose body, on his return from Lisbon, whither he had gone in a decline for the benefit of a softer climate, was consigned to the ocean.

The Parish Church dedicated to St Rheamus RCAM.

This Church with the exception of the tower, was entirely rebuilt in 1836 and restored in 1891. The 13th century tower 13 ½ ft by 12 ½ ft is of two storeys, and the lower plainly vaulted. The western gable is stepped, and the roof is a saddle back. The font basin is in the shape of a decagon; nine of the panels carry a plain shield, the tenth bears a chevron between three ravens but the details are much obscured by the whitewash which has been thickly applied. The rim shows traces of a cover. The base is modern; the original circular shaft 14in in diameter, by 9 ½ in in height pierced with a drain stands loose in the Church – visited 7th July 1920

The Church of St. Rhian 2010 RCAHMW-- a grade II* listed building.

Situated in Llanrhian village about 100m NE of crossroads.

The Church comprises of a 13th or 14th century tower, cruciform nave of 1836 by Daniel Evans, plain chancel probably remodelled after 1845, stone traceried windows and internal alterations 1891 by J P Seddon and J Coates Carter. Nave may include some masonry from previous double naved Church.

The Church is constructed from random rubble stone with low-pitched slate eaves roofs. The west tower has slate saddleback roof with crowsteps and obelisk finials added 1836. Narrow Bell chamber loops and a cambered head 19th century west door and exposed voussoirs of window head over similar doorway within. The nave has broad transepts with raking battlements and crude shoulder and apex finials. Slate coping beneath battlements is slightly returned like a schematic open pediment, echoed by similar slate hood over 3-light traceried pointed windows. Matching pointed-head 2-light windows each side of transepts and elaborate red brick star-shaped chimney at the north-east angle of nave. The chancel has one Hood moulded flat-headed 2-light S window and 4-light E window. Late 18th and 19th century tomb slabs are attached to the south wall.

Interior of the Church comprises: Plastered nave and chancel with 3-sided roofs. Panelled high dado, walls and roofs divided into panels by applied timber strips. Brattished wallplate. Carved wood screen to N transept vestry. Finely carved chancel screen and full set of pews with octagonal colonettes to bench ends, all of 1891. Matching pulpit of 1906, choir stalls and reading desks. Encaustic tiled sanctuary. Clear lattice glazing.

A fine 15th or early 16th century decagonal stone font with reversed shield plaques, one with arms of Sir Rhys ap Thomas (d 1525) is present in the Church. Some plain plaques in the nave's north-east corner to Harries family of Trevaccoon: John Harries of Cryglas d 1797 by H Wood of Bristol; Samuel Harries d 1839; and J H Harries d 1869.

Large churchyard with plain granite piers at entry; scattered headstones and some table tombs, three in iron-railed enclosure E of chancel. Iron-railed enclosure in NW corner with headstones to Harries family.

Visitation of the Archdeaconry of Carmarthen, 1710 Llan Rhiain

The Rectory is the Corps belonging to the Archdeaconry of Carmarthen. Mr Peter Lewis [Peter Lewis collated and inducted September 1688 (SD/VC/7, p. 32)] the Vicar lives at St Davids, & very seldom comes to the Parish notwithstanding 'tis but 3 or 4 miles distant from St Davids. I am told that they have not [f. 80] a Sermon oft'ner than once a quarter, every Sunday Prayers are read once, but the time of their beginning is very irregular, it being often 12 o'clock before they begin. the reason of their beginning at this late hour is because one of the Vicars Choral of St Davids officiates here, which is attended with another inconvenience with respect to St Davids which is a Parish Church, the inconvenience is that since Llanrhiain has been serv'd in this manner Prayers begin too soon at St Davids viz. about 8 in the morning, whereas formerly when the Canons did reside the usual hour of beginning Service at St Davids was nine. Some of the Parishioners of St Davids live 3 Welsh miles from the Church, so that in the winter time they must be up before day, or lose the benefit of morning Service. Prayers at Llan Rhiain are oftenest read in English by Mr Fern an Englishman which is not understood in that Parish, the people being disappointed of hearing Prayers at their own Church read in a language they are acquainted with, go to hear an Anabaptist Preacher at Llan Gloffen about 3 miles distant. A Curate that understands Welsh is much wanted to reside in this Parish. [f. 81] Sixty poor People can read Welsh. The Tenant by the Lease granted by my Predecessor is oblig'd to keep the Chancell in good repair, but the Keys of the Church being refus'd me I cannot give an account of either Church or Chancel. I wanted an opportunity of being satisfy'd in many questions that were ask'd, & more wou'd have been ask'd if I had found a disposition in the person I met with at Llan Rhiain to answer them.

Llanrhian (S. Rhian).—

The Chalice now belonging to this Church is interesting. There are no Hall marks, but the maker's Mark I B is repeated four times though the punches used do not appear to be identical. The bowl, which is plain, rude and beaker-shaped, was probably made by the silversmith whose Mark is given in O. E. P. at 1680. It rests upon a beautiful baluster stem ornamented with scrolls, the edge of the base being richly embellished with a moulding of simple pattern. Height, 6 in. ; diam. of foot, 3 in. ; weight, 6 oz. 17 dwts. It is probable that the stem originally belonged to a chalice or secular cup of much earlier date, whilst its bowl having been damaged or perhaps bearing embellishments considered unsuitable for ecclesiastical purposes, may have been melted down and formed into its present shape. It is otherwise difficult to imagine why so graceful a stem should have been made to support a bowl so void of beauty and rude in character.

A modern Paten, 5 in. in diam., and weighing 4 oz. 5 dwts ; Hall Mark 1883 ; maker's Mark h j l j w in a three-lobed shield ; inscription : " Llanrhian Church 1884. ".

A brass Alms-dish ; a glass Cruet with plated top ; and a pewter Plate, 9 in. in diameter, without marks.

Nonconformist Chapels:

Croesgoch Baptist Chapel

was built in 1816 and restored/redecorated in 1858. The present Chapel, dated 1816, is built in the Simple Gothic style with a gable-entry plan and a large 40 pane window either side of the front door. Also known as Capel y Bedyddwyr this building is now Grade 2 Listed. RCAHMW, November 2010

Elim Capel Bach Sunday school

Elim Capel Baptist Sunday School was built in 1843 and altered during the late nineteenth century. The present Chapel, dated c.1843 is built in the Simple round-Headed style with a gable-entry plan, two storeys and tall windows with Y glazing. Elim is now Grade 2 Listed.

Trefin Methodist Chapel

Trefin Methodist Chapel was built in 1786, rebuilt in 1834 and restored in 1936. The present Chapel, dated 1834, was built in the Simple round-Headed style with a long-wall entry plan and two storeys. Trefin is now Grade 2 Listed. Still open in 2006 RCAHMW, November 2010

Education

According to Lewis -Topographical Dictionary of Wales 1839

A day school is endowed with £9 a year, the interest of money left by the late Mr. David Thomas , of Trevelyne, towards the support of a schoolmaster; and with £3 a year from the executors of the late Mrs. Davies, of Carnachan-wen. Of four Sunday schools, one is in connexion with the Established Church.

The State of Education in Wales 1847

An agricultural parish, labourers receive 1s 3d a day on their own finding and 9d a day with food. There is a resident Clergyman (Jacob Hughes Vicar, Trevyne Llanrian) and resident land proprietor.

Croesgoch Day School

On the 11th January I visited the above place. The school was held in a small room which was part of the Baptist Chapel; but it did often happen that the school does not meet. It had one small window and a fireplace. The furniture consisted of two benches and a plank laid across two upright pieces of timber serves the purpose of a table; all is in wretched repair. It was kept by a man who, although not more than 52 years of age was very infirm and appeared totally unfit for the duties of a school master. -----David Lewis Assistant.

Trefyne Day School

This school was chiefly supported by voluntary subscriptions. The master received annually £9, the interest of money left by the late Mr David Thomas of Trefyne towards the support of a schoolmaster; £3 from the executors of the late Mrs Davies Carnachan-wen; £1 from Mr Morgan Cullod; and 10s from Mr Prosser of Llanrian. The last three subscribers have the nomination of five children for every 10s subscribed each child in addition paying 1d per week. The children nominated receive tickets of admission from the subscribers which have to be renewed every 6 weeks. I visited the schoolroom and found it a very good one, well lighted by four glazed windows and well supplied with desks benches and cards hung on the walls. It was ceiled and boarded and everything was in very good repair. The master was brought up as a draper – but from ill health was forced to leave his business – he seemed a sharp and intelligent man – David Lewis Assistant

National School 1851

Situated in Llanrhian Village on eastern side of crossroads.

Built 1851 to design of Joseph Jenkins of Haverfordwest, as National School with teacher's house attached, now Church Hall and private house. Tudor Gothic in style, squared rubble stone with stone-mullioned flat-headed windows and voussoirs, slate roofs and stone stacks. Picturesque L-plan front with single storey school block to right and gabled 2-storey house projecting to left. School block with W stack, two 3-light windows and door in angle. Tudor-arched projected doorcase carried up to copied bellcote. Circular light and plaque over door. Plaque reads:

'Llanrhian National School. Erected in the year of our Lord 1851 on ground granted by George Le Hunte esq. by the contributions of private individuals aided by grants from the Committee of Council on Education, the National Society and the Church Union Society of this diocese. Jacob Hughes Vicar. John Prosser and Titus Thomas Churchwardens. 'Maethwch hwyn yn addysg ac athrawiaeth yr Arglwydd:' House has west side stack adjoining bellcote and 2-light window each floor. Further range behind has west side stack and south end stack and lower section to south with end stack.

Two-window front facing east with stone voussoirs to C20 windows. CADW Listed

Bickney Tumulus

This mound, directly east of Bickney Farm, is in all probability the tumulus “at the back of Tre Ednyfed Farm” which Fenton (Tour 32) excavated. At “Treneved” so spelt on the Ord Sheet -half a mile north of the mound, nothing approaching a mound is visible or remembered. The Bickney tumulus has a base circumference of about 140 ft and a height of 3 ft. It shows signs of disturbance on its summit over which a hedge has been carried. Fenton seems to have found here “ a small stone hatchet and a small circular stone, with a hole in the centre and a few marks on the one side something like numerals,”of none of which is anything now known –visited 7th July 1920

Bickney Beacon

A ploughed-down mound crossed by a hedgebank, 24m in diameter and 0.5m high, when opened by Fenton (e.19th century) revealed a large cist, sealed by a capstone c.2.6m Long, containing a 'holed axe-hammer' and traces of a possible inhumation. RCAHMW J.Wiles 14.05 2002

Llain y Sibedau Circle

Fenton, Tours

Above the Church, (Llanrian) following a little hollow through which, as through the frequent dells that intersect this district, murmurs a limpid stream, increased to a size to supply a mill, a mile below, you enter a field to the right, called Llain y Sibedau, or the slang of the gibbets, where now are seen overturned and broken many large stones, two of which, perhaps the smallest now entire, about eight or nine feet Long, were erected in the memory of man, and might, in earlier times, have been surmounted with stone imposts; and in that age of anarchy, when almost every farm had its petty tyrant, used as a place of execution . There can be no doubt but it was originally druidical, a Stonehenge in miniature.

RCAM 1920

This -Fenton's 'Stonehenge in miniature' (Tour 35) – is now a heap of stones some 60ft in circumference and 4ft high, standing on Llain y Sibedau. Nothing remains to denote either an avenue of a circle; cultivation and land clearance have left only a small cairn. Many of its components are small blocks of white quartz. Twenty yards to the south is a mound which has every appearance of being sepulchral. It is unnoticed by Fenton and subsequent writers, and is not marked on the Ord. Surv. sheet. It is from 2 to 3ft high 150ft in circumference, and is apparently undisturbed. In the south hedge of llain y Sibedau are several large boulders – visited 7th July 1920

Castell Coch 1920

A rocky headland in the extreme north of the parish, on a sharp upward slope. Across the neck of the promontory are two strong earth and stone banks, and two intermediate platforms or shallow ditches. The outer rampart is 80ft Long and 2 ft above the interior. The inner bank is one foot higher than the outer and has a fall of 5ft to a platform which is 18 ft wide. The inner ditch is 5ft wide, cut through solid rock, and is so shallow as to be almost level. The area enclosed is about 3 acres. The entrance was between the southern end of the ramparts and the cliffs; it has been disturbed by a landslide –visited 7th May 1920

Castell Coch RCAHMW 2013

A large promontory fort of approximately 1.7 hectares in area. The defenses are built across the narrowest part of the promontory which is here about 60m wide. These defenses consist of three lines. The outermost is a rock-cut ditch about 4m wide and 2m deep, rather square cut. On the inner side there are two banks the first forming a central defence being the larger at about 1m high and the second innermost bank somewhat less. Although the defended area contains a great deal of habitable level space there are no visible signs of any dwellings or structures, although a possible roundhouse was noted in 1963, but has not been confirmed. The cliff edge wall, which is a more or less continuous feature on this property, is built on the landward side of the defences but quite close to the rock-cut ditch. It is a very well consolidated structure here. 40m above O.D.

Porth Egr Promontory Fort

Porth-Egr Promontory Fort was recorded as a possible hillfort by DAT. Aerial photographs (neg. ref. 2002/5020-68, 5th March 2002) clearly show 3 lines of defence cutting off the main promontory. The outermost and middle ramparts are set parallel to one another and cut across the promontory at right Angles to the cliff. The innermost rampart is at a diagonal and appears to have a ditch or quarry pits placed on the inner edge; this may result from a different phase of works.

Clover Bach Standing stone

large upright stone or orthostat "placed" near a boundary within a field known as Clover Bach. Possibly a standing stone normally thought to be of Bronze Age date but equally a possible erratic boulder. There are no discernible marks on the stone. It is about 1.1m high and about 0.75, x 0.6m in plan, but with one corner cut off making it more triangular in plan. It tapers towards it top with a flattened but sloping apex. 40m above OD. John Latham RCAHMW 6 January 2015

Trwycastell Peninsular Boundary bank

A possible boundary bank and defense associated with the partially defended promontory to its immediate west (Trwyncastell Peninsula). Consists of a length of what appears to be a boundary bank but which has no present-day function, being entirely within a modern field. It appears to cut off the base of the peninsula between Culporth and Porth Egr but ends after about 50m. About 1m high and 1.5m wide at base. This and the other possible "fortifications" associated with the "promontory fort" point at the possibility that the defended site as such was not completed. John Latham RCAHMW 10 December 2014

Defended Enclosure Watch House

Earthwork of an Iron-Age defended enclosure, to the south of Watch House. The enclosure measures approx. 45m by 25m and the southern boundary follows a minor lane, which has partly fossilised the boundary. This site was discovered and photographed during aerial reconnaissance by RCAHMW on 16th Nov. 2010, and has not yet been visited on the ground.

L. Osborne, 2nd Nov. 2011.

Parc-Y-Fynwent Cist Cemetery, Croesgoch

An early medieval cemetery consisting of stone-lined graves, or "cist burials". Two graves were observed during housing development November 2000, one being disturbed by machinery. One burial was recorded by the Dyfed Archaeological Trust, 2000. Radio carbon dating gave a period of use for the cemetery from AD37-600. G. Edwards, RCAHMW, 14/07/2003.

White House Chambered tomb

The remains of a burial chamber, incorporated in a hedgebank. A capstone, 2.2m by 1.8m and 1.2m thick, rests on the ground and upon a single supporting stone, 1.5m high by 2.1m. On the E side are two 'portal stones', 1.5m high, whilst other stones around the site, up to 2.2m Long, may have formed part of the monument. There is no trace of a cairn or mound.

RCAHMW J.Wiles 15.05.2002

Cwmwdig Well

Well associated with a Chapel that has been demolished, but that is shown on 25" OS map of 1899. " The site of this Chapel was no doubt either in the present farmyard of Cwmwdig or in the field called Parc y Fynwent... There is no trace now of the Chapel walls. The well is undoubtedly the fine spring near the bottom of the farmyard, which feeds the pond there and also supplies the house."

Mesur-yr-dorth,

'the loaf gauge', is a rough pillar stone, 1.0m high by 0.5m, that has been built into a road-side wall for at least 70 years. The stone bears an incised Latin outline ringcross, thought to be 7th-9th century. RCAHMW J.Wiles 14.05.02

Llanrhian Mill RCAHMW

Llanrhian Mill has two-storeys and is built into the bank, of rubblestone with large, roughly-squared quoins and a half-hipped slate roof. In the centre of the south-west (principal) elevation is a small plaque with the initials I W and the date 1827. This may record the rebuilding of an existing mill on the site, since a mill at Llanrhian is noted in 1557. The south-west elevation had two cart entrances, one of which has been blocked with a modern inserted window. A built-up walkway gives access to the upper floor via a door in the north-west gable.

The mill is reputed to retain a full set of machinery, with an overshot, composite waterwheel at the south-east gable. It was working in 1952, but ceased soon after. The building has been converted to a dwelling, by excavating the bank to the rear and constructing a single-storey lean-to, and with a single-storey extension to the south-west. Against the latter a pair of French burr mill stones were propped in August 2011. W J Crompton, RCAHMW, 9 July 2014.

Aberfelin Corn Mill

The ruins of Aberfelin Corn Mill probably date from the eighteenth century. There is an overshot wheel fed from a mill pond at SM83483238. It is shown on the Ordnance Survey County series map (Pembroke. VIII.14 1889). J.Wiles, RCAHMW, 13 April 2004

Croes Goch Village

Archaeological sources suggest that Croes-Goch is the site of cist burial and features of the late/post Roman period. It is also known to have been an important focus for religious activities Throughout the medieval period. The village has an early Welsh Baptist Chapel formed in 1768. RCAHMW, 2010.

Quarrying -Slate and stone

The Pembrokeshire Slate Quarrymen by Dafydd Roberts, in Llafur [Journal of Welsh Labour History]Vol 5/1, 1988

Inspection of the Enumerator's Schedules for the parish of Llanrhian, which contains the slate quarries of Trwynllwyd, Abereiddi and Porthgain reveals that there were a number of families and individuals from north Wales living within the parish and probably working at the quarries. The word probably is used because the occupations of the persons enumerated are a little confused being variously described as ; Slate Quarrymen ; Slate Quarry Man ; Labourer ; Slater ; Quarryboy ; or Slate Cutter. In Llanrhian a 'Slater' may of course have been someone who put slates on roofs.

The census of 1841 shows people in Llanrhian parish who were born outside the parish, one example of someone probably working at the quarry is;-

At Trefin ; Evan Jones, aged 30, and his wife Mary , aged 30, with children Elizabeth 10, John 4, Evan 2 months. Mary and the children were natives of PEM but Evan was not. Was Evan perhaps one of the first persons from north Wales to work at the local quarries ?

In 1841, only 7 'Slaters' and a 'Superintendent' worked at the Llanrhian quarries, but this was a time of a soaring demand for roofing slates.

By 1851 the census records over 70. This return shows that there were many families and individuals living within the parish whose roots were in north Wales.

By 1861 the slate industry was in decline in this locality and the late 1870s were to prove a difficult time for the slate industry in Wales as a whole, and there followed in the early 1880s significant emigration from north Wales, especially, to the slate belt of the USA.

By the early C20, most Pembrokeshire slate quarries had closed, after giving up against the intense competition from Gwynedd quarries. Meanwhile, the local labour force, with some northern families amongst them, either worked in the stone quarries or were forced to look elsewhere for work.

Trwynllwyd slate quarry

Some miles south and west, near the village of Llanrhian.

Note:- Pembrokeshire slate, because of its geological nature, is rather inferior to the older, harder, slate of north Wales.

A roofless shell of a building is shown on OS 1st edition mapping with the annotation 'Tank'. More recent interpretation suggest that it once housed steam machinery and water supply for the quarry nearby. More aerial photography reveals that the walls are still largely extant.

Porthgain

From about 1878 stone (slate, then granite) was regularly exported from Porthgain aboard the quarry company's six specially-built 350-ton coasters, and between 1902 and 1904 the harbour was enlarged to meet the demand of a flourishing trade. During the summer of 1909 one hundred and one shipments totalling 13,000 tons were made. Bricks for the hoppers were also baked on site and were later exported to Llanelli, with 'seconds' shipped to Dublin. In the inter-war years trade did not recover sufficiently and the crushing plant closed in 1931. Today, the brick hoppers are protected as scheduled ancient monuments and the harbour has become a Haven for tourists and industrial archaeologists

Porthgain Harbour

RCAHMW, 2009.

From about 1878 stone (slate, then granite) was regularly exported from Porthgain Harbour aboard the quarry company's six specially-built 350-ton coasters, and between 1902 and 1904 the harbour was enlarged to meet the demand of a flourishing trade. During the summer of 1909 one hundred

Porthgain Slate Quarry House RCAHMW

The remains of a substantial structure, probably the quarry manager's house. Rectangular in plan and formerly of two stories, the upper floor now gone and only one gable end surviving, but joist slots for the lost floor clearly visible. Internally there is a dividing wall at the N end Marking off a small room, very obviously added to a not part of the original structure. At the W end the SW corner has been walled in and is filled with rubble to the first floor height. There is an unusually high and wide entrance gap to the S and a further gap of more normal size to its E which has been blocked partially by the insertion of the internal dividing wall, which abuts the gap. A small outbuilding once existed at the E shown by low walls - probably a latrine. Overall the main part of the structure is about 12m x 6.5m with a maximum height to the top of the gable of 5.5m. The wall thickness is a consistent 0.6m. The building, probably unstable during its time of use has been buttressed by a massive stone block at the W end and by a wall at the S beside the wide entrance gap. The whole is built of the local friable, stratified black stone. The building was roofed in 1907 (OS 25 inch Map). John Latham RCAHMW 28 October 2014

Porthgain Quarry weigh house RCAHMW

A small brick built hut. Rectangular in plan with entrance at the SW and a window gap at the SE. Roofless but retaining gable ends. A brick lined pit has been provided running beneath the window to a deep pit just beyond the building - presumably this housed the weighing mechanism. Built in 1909. about 3m x 2.2m overall. 30m above OD. John Latham RCAHMW 12 January 2015

Porthgain Quarry Building

A rectangular mortared stone building reinforced here and there with the odd brick and with a single window in one end and an entrance gap in one side. The building was evidently conceived as a partly underground structure. Joist slots survive at about 0.2m above present ground level and the top of a fireplace is visible below the window opening and also a sort of alcove in the side wall, both features below the joist slots. Purpose of this building far from clear. The immediate area is now very overgrown, disguising any relationship the structure might have had with the tramway, a branch of which passes between it and Pen Top terrace just to the NW and leads directly to the hoppers above Porthgain Harbour. The earliest 25 inch map shows it as an actual part of Pen Top terrace, later cut off by the tramway and then apparently re-roofed or at least reutilised. Dimensions overall about 7.5m x 5.5m., walls about 0.6m thick and up to 2.75m high. 30m above OD. John Latham RCAHMW 20 January 2015

Porthgain Quarry –Cutting and Bridge

A deep cutting linking the top of the quarry pit with the hoppers above Porthgain Harbour. It appears to follow the line of the tunnel which connects the base of the pit with the Quay. A path crosses the cutting at one point on a neat stone bridge with a brick arch. The cutting is about 5m wide and 3.5m deep and about 110m Long. Probably the line of the tramway and "Blondin" system which carried slate and materials to the harbour prior to the construction of the tunnel. 30m above OD. John Latham RCAHMW 20 January 2015

Porthgain Quarry -Pit

A deep quarry pit and a source of better quality slate from that found at Abereiddi to the W. The sides have partially crumbled in but a few vertical rock faces are still visible. The bottom of the pit is now filled with scrub. Access difficult but what appear to have been steps are shown on the North side on the 1907 25 inch OS map. A tunnel now leads from the base of the pit to the Quay at Porthgain and its entrance (or part of it) can be seen emerging into the centre of the pit. There was once an incline on the North side of the quarry connected to the tramway system and also a "Blondin" system for hauling material out of the pit. This was made redundant by the construction of the tunnel. Overall about 70m x 70m and about 30m deep. The top of the quarry is 35m above OD. John Latham RCAHMW 20 January 2015

Porthgain Quarry -Engine House and Lift RCAHMW

A range of buildings perched on the edge of the former main quarry pit (now a tidal pool) between the pit and the sea. Consists of a one or possibly a two storey building with gable roof - probably the engine house, and another rectangular structure built right at the edge of the pit which has walling extending right down into the pit itself - probably the remains of the "lift". Both structures are clearly shown on the earliest 25 inch OS map. Built of local black sedimentary stone. The larger building is about 19m x 6m and smaller (lift building) about 9m x 9m. Both structures were at the terminal point of the tramway linking the site to Porthgain harbour (NPRN 400060). John Latham RCAHMW 18 November 2014

Porthgain Quarry Cottages RCAHMW

A row of perhaps three roofless cottages plus a smaller outbuilding at one end similar in style to the other Row of houses nearby (NPRN 420562). Each is about 7m wide and 4.5m deep. Note that five structures appear to be on this site according to the 1st ed 25 inch OS. Just to the S are the remains of a Row of outbuilding between these cottages and the cliff edge, separated by a narrow path. Few details survive but the cottages are assumed to have had doorways on the S side and to be divided internally. Overall the Row is 32m Long x 5.5m deep. John Latham RCAHMW 4 November 2014

Porthgain Quarry Spoil Tips RCAHMW

Just S of the main Porthgain Stone quarry pit edge and spreading out from a central point are several "fingers" of spoil. Possibly not associated directly with the stone quarry but with the slate quarry that pre-dates the stone quarry and was largely destroyed by its construction. The site is contained within an area of about 50m x 30m. 35m above OD. John Latham RCAHMW 6 January 2015

Porthgain Quarry Area of Spoil

A large area of finely graded spoil on the cliff top. Probably related to the slate quarry which was later superceded by the stone quarry in the same area. The spoil is eroded by various paths. Quite an extensive area stretching in a band for about 100m or so NW - SE along the cliff and about 20m wide. A roofed building is shown within the area on the earlier OS 25 inch maps. 30m above OD. John Latham RCAHMW 12 January 2015

Porthgain Quarry Slate Workshop RCAHMW

Sited now on a virtually inaccessible rock pinnacle are what appear to a couple of stone structures, possibly the remains of slate processing workshops. At the top of the pinnacle is also the masonry base of what is described on the OS 25 inch map of 1907 as "statue". This had gone by 1921 when the old RCAHMW Pembrokeshire report stated that: "...has been washed away". 10m above OD. John Latham RCAHMW 18 November 2014

Porthgain Quarry Offices or Stores

A linear complex of roofless brick buildings evidently having a variety of functions connected with the quarry - most probably offices and stores. Consists of at least two large rooms and some smaller ones. Gable ends visible in places. Some rendering or plastering survives inside but some rooms were probably left with exposed brickwork. There is a fireplace in the large room at the W. There was a smithy either at or near this site marked on the earleir 25inch OS map (no longer evident). Overall in plan about 27.5m x 6.5m John Latham RCAHMW 23 December 2014

Porthgain Quarry Beacon RCAHMW

A rectangular mortared stone pillar possibly the site marked as "Beacon" on the OS 25 inch maps. Built of a black sedimentary stone which has weathered badly. Set in the top of the structure are the rusted remains of two iron stakes. There is a hole passing through the pillar about 0.15m in diameter. Purpose unclear but possibly some sort of signalling device associated with the quarry tramway which passes nearby. About 1.15m square and 2m high. 30m above OD.

John Latham RCAHMW 12 January 2015

Porthgain Slate Quarry Powder store RCAHMW

A massive structure, most likely once beehive shaped but now having lost its "roof". Circular in plan about 4.5m in diameter overall with walls about 1m thick at the base - tapering towards the top, and about 2m high. There is an entrance gap at the E protected by two lengths of wall abutting the main structure, forming a sort of porch. In profile the walls have two distinct steps all around about 0.5m and 1m from the ground. The whole is built of carefully laid black sedimentary stone mortared together. The interior shows some sign of having been rendered. A fairly typical structure of its type used for storing explosive powder and associated with the nearby quarry. John Latham RCAHMW 4 November 2014

Porthgain Stone Quarry RCAHMW

This site consists basically of two adjacent quarries which could be called the upper and the lower. Both have their own separate access routes which link up and continue towards Porthgain along the tramway route. The quarries are the result of the most recent phase of quarrying in the area (formerly slate and later roadstone at lower levels) which took place from the mid C19th. The quarry was in full production and crushed stone was being exported by 1878 (Porthgain village Industries). It is sited on the coast and the quarrying has effectively moved the sea-cliff inland. It is on two levels the seaward pit being the lower. This lower pit contains a line of four massive timber posts - purpose unknown, but is otherwise a featureless hole with steep crumbling sides, 15m or so high, the pit being overall about 150m x 100m. Access to the base of it is via an incline, once cable worked with a winding house at the top (destroyed). The upper quarry is more level at its base and its crumbling cliffs are about 10m high. This is also more or less featureless save for a line of stones placed a few metres from the cliff face in a wandering line mirroring the line of the cliff itself. Overall the upper quarry is about 120m x 80m. John Latham RCAHMW 23 December 2014.

Porthgain slate Quarry- Quarrymen's cottages

A terrace of six houses known as "The Row" each about 6.5m wide and 5m deep, plus a smaller store or possibly wash house at the E end. Overall about 42m x 5.5m. Roof gone but one gable end partly survives indicating former roof form, no internal divisions survive. Entrances were at the S side but actual entrance details and doorways have been destroyed. No timberwork survives. Built of random rubble with no attempt at quoins. The stone is a friable sedimentary black rock, much weathered. Maximum height of walls at surviving gable about 3m., thickness about 0.65m. The Row is shown as roofed on the 1907 25 inch OS map. Behind the Row, on the N side a deep pit has been dug and the remains of a small building survives. Also shown on the OS map and associated with the Row is a walled area about 70m x 25m., perhaps some sort of kitchen garden. John Latham RCAHMW 28 October 2014

Porthgain Slate Quarry – Houses or sheds

Now ruinous and overgrown a drystone built Row of four enclosures or sheds built in a line with a slightly larger one at the end to the S. Possibly dwellings or more likely sheds associated with the quarry either the slate quarry or the stone quarry that superseded it. About 59m x 8m in plan overall, less than 0.5m high and about 0.75m thick. 30m above OD.

John Latham RCAHMW 12 January 2015

Porthgain Stone Quarry – store RCAHMW

A large roofless brick building - a single room with a wide opening at one end suggesting use as an engine shed or store. There are windows along each side, partially blocked on the E side. The W side of the structure has fallen over at sill height. At one side of the entrance "GR 1911" is inscribed in the brickwork. Overall the building is about 10m x 6m and about 4m to the top of the surviving gable end. 25m above OD.

Porth-Gain & Abereiddi Tramway

A tramway, marked as such on the 1907 25 inch OS map. It connects the main quarry pit at Abereiddi (now a tidal pool) with the hoppers above the harbour at Porthgain. The section of the tramway at the W nearest the quarry pit connects with the processing works and lift above the pit. Here there are the remains of sleeper beams each about 1.2m Long. The trackway itself being about 2.5m wide. Further E the line continues to a water Tank where it veers SE and splits into two branches (possibly three) to terminate above the hoppers at Porthgain. There are no surviving rails. Trucks were initially pulled by horses but later by steam locomotives. 30m above OD.

John Latham RCAHMW 18 November 2014.

A c.3.14km tramway running between Porth-Gain & Abereiddi industrial complexes. Portrayed as intact, but disused by OS County series (Pembroke. VIII.14; XV.1 1889). J.Wiles 13.04.2004

Pen Top terrace and gardens

Terraced housing, with gardens/allotment across a lane to the E, associated with Porth-Gain industrial complex

Depicted on OS County series (Pembroke VIII.14 1889), presently (1994) ruinous. RCAHMW J.Wiles 13.04.2004

Abereiddi

Abereiddi Tower

A small look-out tower on the highest point of the Trwyncastell Peninsula, neatly built of roughly coursed stone, mortared together. One storey high with apparently the remains of a flat roof of slate slabs supported on timber beams (mostly rotted or gone). There are three equally spaced windows each much the same size, presumably once with frames giving a wide view. Between these window spaces are, at the NE, a doorway, at the S a fireplace with chimney within the wallspace and at the NW a shallow alcove with wooden lintel. The window spaces and the door space are topped with slate lintels. The internal diameter of the structure is about 3.5m, 5m in diameter overall with walls about 0.8m thick. The total surviving height is about 3.75m. 35m above OD

John Latham RCAHMW 11 November 2014

Abereiddi Lime kilns

Two limekilns are marked on OS 1st edition mapping, one to the east and another to the west of the access road to the foreshore. Modern aerial photography confirms that both are still extant.

Abereiddi Quarry

Landing Place RCAHMW

The presence of the limekilns and the large slate quarry complex to the north of the bay confirm a landing place to serve the small settlement. Admiralty Sailing Directions for 1870 note the rocks which are 'dangers to vessels bound to Aberreiddy to land slate'.

St Brides Slate Quarries;Porth-Gain Slate Quarries, Abereiddi RCAHMS

The 'Blue Lagoon' at Abereiddi/Abereiddy was formerly the main quarry pit of the St Brides Slate quarry, which was part of the Abereiddi Industrial Complex. The quarry is depicted as part of the 'St Brides Slate Quarries' is on 1889 Ordnance Survey mapping, but 1907 Ordnance Survey mapping depicts it as 'Porth-Gain Slate Quarries'. The Porthgain Slate Quarries extracted stone not only from the headland immediately above the village, but also from half a kilometre or so west at the headland of Penclegyr, and west again on this headland above Abereiddy village. Ruins survive overlooking the pool of the former site of the engine house and other buildings associated with the quarry operations. Part of Abereiddi industrial complex . The quarry was connected to Porth-Gain harbour by tramway . The Pit is now a tidal pool accessible to small boats and with a concrete slipway at the East side. T. The Aber Eiddi industrial complex

The Aber Eiddi industrial complex includes the St Brides Slate Quarries (NPRN 40620) linked to features at Porth-Gain by a tramway. It is part of the wider Porthgain Industrial complex that also includes the headland at Penclegyr.

Llanstadwell & Neyland

Llanstadwell (Llan-Studwal) 1839 Lewis

Llanstadwell (LLAN-STUDWAL), a parish, in the hundred of Rhôs, union and county of Pembroke, South Wales, 3 miles (E. by S.) from Milford; contains 833 inhabitants. It is situated on the northern shore of Milford Haven, and comprises a considerable tract of fertile and well cultivated land, with some portions of hilly ground, which, from its steepness, is but ill adapted to repay the expense and labour of cultivation. The agriculture is not indifferent; but there are few farmers of much capital, and others display little inclination to adopt the English systems. A visible improvement has taken place in the general roads, but they are yet far from good, which is the more to be regretted, as the communication between the adjacent towns of Haverfordwest, Milford and Pembroke Dock is on the increase. Owing to the contiguity of the dockyard, which is immediately opposite the parish on the other side of the Haven, the population has been very considerably augmented of late years. It was once in contemplation to construct a dockyard at Nayland, in the parish, and some lands in the vicinity were purchased, on both sides of the harbour, on which to erect works for its security and defence. Considerable progress was made in the erection of one of the fortresses on the south side of the Haven, but upon the death of Sir John Philipps (father of the late Lord Milford), who was the principal promoter of the design, the plan was abandoned, after two ships of war only had been built, the "Prince of Wales," of seventy-four guns, and the "Milford" frigate. The surrounding scenery is varied, combining the fine expanse of water in the Haven on the south, and the spacious open Channel on the west, with extensive tracts of richly cultivated country on the north and east. In the vicinity are several good houses, of which the parish contains Jordanston, Hayston, and Newton, the last a dilapidated old house on a valuable estate. The living is a discharged vicarage, rated in the King's Books at £7. 17., endowed with £200 royal bounty and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rev. A. Crymes. Two-thirds of the great and small tithes are impropriate, and the vicar has the remaining third, now commuted into a rent-charge of £110, of which 10s. is in lieu of Easter offerings; there is also a glebe of seven and a half acres, valued at £10 per annum. The Church, dedicated to St. Tudwal, is an ancient structure in good repair, pleasantly situated on the margin of the Haven, in the southern part of the parish. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists, in each of which a Sunday school is also held. A munificent bequest was made by the late Richard Mathias, of Hayston, esq., of all his personal effects, amounting to nearly £1900, for the purpose of endowing a charity school, wherein the poor children of this, and the adjoining parish of RhôsMarket, were to be educated; the Clergymen of both places for the time being, and others, to be trustees. Owing to law expenses, &c., this bequest was reduced to £1278. 19. in the three and a half per cents., placed in the control of the accountant-general, and producing an income of £44.12. per annum. The deed requires the school to be held in the parish of Llanstadwell, though for the benefit of the two parishes. Some remains of two ancient British encampments, comprising each an area of about an acre, are still visible; one situated at the north-eastern extremity of the parish, nearly opposite the village of RhôsMarket, and the other at its south-western extremity, on a point on the shore of Milford Haven.

Before the Normans.

is the predominant name used to describe the area which was originally (and still is) the parish of Llanstadwell, although the name Neyland does not appear in written records until 1596 and not in its present spelling till 1793

Acc/to the Place Names of Pembrokeshire

Nailand - 1596 OPb ii 563

Nayland - 1773 Morg Rich, 1811 Fenton, Neyland 1793

Llanstadwell (as Lanstadhewal) on the other hand was mentioned by Giraldus Cambrensis writing in the twelfth century and was a well established community then, being a fertile farming area, warmed by the waters of the Milford Haven, providing a rich variety of sources of food.

In the Taxatio of 1291, the name is spelt Lanstowel. Browne Willis ascribes it to St Sywall - an evident confusion. Rees (Welsh Saints 134) suggests St Tudwal, whose name is associated with the district of LLeyn in Carnarvonshire. In 1517 the St David's Episcopal Register gave it as Llnastadwell. The Elizabethan communion cup has Lanstetwall.

Evidence that the area has been inhabited since early times, was of some importance, being worth defending, is supplied by names of some of the fields.

Camp Park,

a field in the north east of the parish near the boundary with Rosemarket has the scanty remains of a rath and there was another of which traces have completely disappeared although the field name might give some indication of the site as well might Mount Meadow.

records that "some remains of two ancient British encampments, comprising each an area of about one acre, are visible; one is situated at the north-eastern extremity of the parish, nearly opposite the village of Rhosmarket, and the other at its south-western extremity, on a point on the shore of Milford Haven." [Would the latter have been in part of the area now utilised by the Refinery?]

Taking the field names into consideration the old field names of Longstone, Longstone Park, Longstone Meadow near Waterston could indicate that in the Long distant past that here could have been the site of a burial chamber but that all traces have been destroyed. There is of course one in the next parish of Burton. Bronze age man also left his mark with a scattering of burnt mounds, low mounds of burnt cracked stone situated near a stream, the remains, it is presumed, of early to middle Bronze age cooking sites.

With the coming of Christianity to the area, the name Llanstadwell

A Celtic enclosure or Church site (Llan) coupled with what would appear to be the name of the Saint to whom the Church is dedicated (Tudwal), would suggest a very early Celtic Christian settlement. There have been questions raised about the name of the Saint as St Tudwal is more usually associated with Churches in the north of Wales. Certainly the settlement was one of importance with a ruling Welsh family or class who were direct descendants of Howell Dda the last Welsh ruler of the whole of Wales and the great law giver with a palace at Whitland. A family whose descendants played a very important part in the life of Pembrokeshire and of medieval Britain.

Compared with many of the towns of the area, Llanstadwell today, appears insignificant but in 1578 it was important enough to appear on the first map of Pembrokeshire by Christopher Saxon who under the authority of Queen Elizabeth I, surveyed the whole of England and Wales

1690's

Llanstadwell is recorded on Capt. Collin's Navigational chart of the Milford Haven compiled in the 1690's.

1748

1623/4

According to a survey of Crown lands in 1623 - 4; it was apparent that the remnants of the old manorial system was still in existence in the area, with tenants farming several small pieces of land intermingled with that of their fellow tenants and at that time it was recommended that the various holdings should be consolidated so that the tenants could enclose them, but this process still had not been completed by the mid 1700's in Llanstadwell and not till the 1800's in Honeyborough.

Churches & Chapels.

The Parish Church Dedicated to St Tudwell

It would be very safe to assume that the present Church has Celtic origins and that there was a Church on the site founded well before the Norman period dedicated to a Saint Tadwell or Tudwal.

Of The Lives of the British Saints by S. Baring-Gould and John Fisher does not give us very much information about St Tudwal's origins .

Very little is known except that he was a native of Britain and his mothers name was Pompaea (was he of Romano British descent?). He was reputed to be, by the Celtic Church a Saint and Bishop who spent much time in Brittany around Leon. About this period many of the "Saints" of Britain left the country to avoid the "Yellow" plague, was he one of them? It is alleged that he left Britain with his mother and 72 monks and spent the rest of his life working abroad. One of his foundations was a large Monastery at Trequier called "Val Trechor". He is said to have died on November 30th 553 AD. [So little is known about him that it is difficult to find any link between him and Llanstadwell - did he establish the first Llan there before he went abroad or did one of his followers or monks?]

The present Church, unfortunately, like so many of our local churches has been Victorianised although there are still signs in the base of some of the walls and in the interior of earlier work. Laws records that the Church had one of the very few examples of Norman architecture in the county, a round late Norman arch. The tall tower at the west end is reputed to have been originally 15c and the nave, chancel and the north Chapel could date from the 13c. The Piscine is probably of that date as well. There is a blocked lancet window on the north side of the chancel and a squint in the north Chapel. The floor and walls were raised several feet in 1876 and the porch, vestry, south transept porch and windows all date from that time. The Royal Commission of Ancient Monuments says that it was "most drastically restored in 1876 when both walls and floor were raised 4 ft." The font has a modern circular shaft and square base. The Elizabethan Communion Cup gave the name as Lanstetwall.

Llanstadwell (St. Tudwal). July 8th, 1858. Glynne (Arch Camb 1885)

A plain Church of the Pembrokeshire type, consisting of nave and chancel, a wide transeptal Chapel on the north, and a western tower. There is no arch at present opening to the transept; but a rude, plain, pointed one to the chancel, with a small squint on the north side of it, similar to others of the district, cutting off the angle. There are no windows on the north of the nave, and almost all the existing windows are modern abominations; but on the east side of the transept is a closed one of two trefoiled ogee lights, with foiled circle between, and the whole under a flat label. The chancel is lower than the nave. The tower has the rude, fortified look so common in this county; is embattled, with a corbel-table, divided by only one string, and without buttresses; has a square turret at the north-east, and the openings are only square-topped slits. The windows are all guarded by shutters.

According to the RCAM:

The building (most drastically restored in 1876 when both walls and floor were raised 4 ft.) consists of Chancel (16 1/2 ft. by 16 ft.) nave (27ft. by 17 ft.) west tower (17 ft square). In the north wall of the chancel are traces of a single light now blocked. In the south wall is a plain piscina. The chancel arch is modern. The recent alterations have concealed a squint from the chancel to the north transept. All the windows of the building are modern, as are the north porch and doorway. The font (29in by 25 in., with basin 19in by 18 in) is plain and stands on a modern circular shaft and square base. The tower of three stages, has a plain corbel table and battlements, with a string course about mid height. In the north east angle is the stair turret containing 75 stairs. The lower story of the tower is vaulted; it opens to the nave by a plain pointed arch, but has no external doorway.

Acc to Giraldus Cambrensis., De Jure (R.S.), Vol. III pp153 - 4

The Manor and Church originally belonged to the Bishop of St David's but Giraldus Cambrensis records that in the period between 1115 and 1148 while Bernard was Bishop of St David's that "the lands alienated by Wilfred (the previous Bishop) and the manora of Lansthewal and St Ysmael on Milverdic Haven, occupied by newcomers and strangers, were not recovered by him or any other afterwards."

It would appear that the newcomers and strangers that Giraldus was talking about were the monks of the priory of Black Canons founded by Robert Fitz Richard Castellan and Lord of Haverfordwest, called also Robert de Hwlfoordd, who founded a priory on the bank of the river, a short distance from the town, a priory of in which he afterwards passed the remainder of his life. According to the Taxatio of 1291

It is referred to as "Lanstowel" and valued at £6 13s 4d which made it one of the poorer churches belonging to the priory, only Dale having a lower value. The fact that the parish was not of great value would have put a tremendous strain on the resources of Thomas Balymore, Vicar of Llanstadwell in 1393 when he entertained Richard II at his house, the King awaiting passage to Ireland but was delayed by bad weather. He was reimbursed though as it is recorded that on August 25th 1393 one payment of 40 shillings was made to the Vicar. The financial situation had not improved by 1517 as it was recorded that Llanstadwell was excepted from paying the 2 tenths tax granted to the Lord King because it was so poor. To emphasis this, when taxed in 1543 The Churchwardens of Llanstadwell, David Webbe and Robert Broune had to collect 11d, Burton whose Churchwardens at the time were Watkyn Colen and William Goodrige had to find 3s 2d

1545 Shortly after the dissolution, the rectory was on 10th May 1545 (with others) leased to Sir Henry Jones, of the King's household, for 21 years Glynne Notes (Arch Camb 1885 V ii 213)

1610 William Walters of Roch owned the rectory of Llanstadwell. The financial situation had not improved very much in spite of the change of ownership and in 1671 the living was valued at £74, another record of seven years later states that this was one of the parishes whose parsonage was recorded as either inadequate or out of repair. How large a congregation attended the Church during this time is not recorded but there are records which show that at Easter 1758 there were 80 communicants out of a possible 130.

In 1795 Lewis Child, who held estates at Begelly and Newton, bought the tithes of Llanstadwell. He paid 3000 guineas for them and in 1841 Lewis records that the living is a discharged vicarage in the archdeaconry and diocese of St David's rated in the King's Books at £7. 17s endowed with £200 royal bounty and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Lewis Child esq., to whom two thirds of the great and small tithes were impropriated, the remaining third belonging to the vicar. Mr Child disposed of the greater part of his tithes to the respective proprietors of the lands. The Church, dedicated to St Tudwal, is an ancient structure in good repair, pleasantly situated on the margin of the Haven, in the southern part of the parish

According to the Census of Religious Buildings 1851

The parish covered an area of 3971 acres in 1851 with a total population of 9015 of which 431 were male and 474 female. The income consisted of endowed land £11; tithe £109; glebe £4 fees. The Church could seat 175 of which 50 seats were free and the average attendance was recorded as 110 plus 20 scholars.

1851 The Vicar, Rev. Joseph Tombs lived in Hill St, Haverfordwest so would have had to travel that distance to take services or to visit parishioners.

The Church registers are archived in the National Library of Wales and cover the periods:

Baptisms 1714 - 1904.

Marriages 1714 - 1892.

Burials 1714 - 1903.

St Clement's Church,

The original St Clements Church Neyland inspiration of the Rev Lacy Henry Ramsey was built in 1896 of wood and corrugated iron. The first service was held there in October of that year.

Unfortunately in the great gale of November 1928 it was flattened. Soon after a temporary building was erected but fund-raising was carried out for a more substantial building designed by Coats Carter and this new Church was dedicated on 11 June 1931

Non Conformist Churches and Chapels

Prior the advent of the railway in 1856 coming to Nayland,(Fenton 1811)now, the main population of that small village was congregated near the shore of the pill and the shore.

There had been a shipyard and a salt works pubs and two Chapels but all this area was taken over by the building and marshalling of the new railway.

Wesleyan Methodist Chapels

1841 there was a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel at Waterston, Llanstadwell parish. This came under the Pembroke circuit and was built in 1836, had a membership of about 50 with seats for 60 of which 50 were free In 1851 in the registration of Churches and Chapels the comment was "I beg to observe that this Chapel is not attended Regularly by any Minister....." John Lewis, Registrar. It was rebuilt during the 1880's, in the Gothic style with a long-wall entry plan but it had declined greatly in numbers by 1890. The Chapel was still in use in October 20th 1937 when it had been agreed to close the Wesleyan Methodist Chapel at Pennar, Pembroke Dock to surrender the lease for the Chapel and the house to the Orielton estate and to dispose of the contents. The Pulpit and Organ were sold to Waterston Chapel for £1 each.

The Wesleyan's at Neyland had been using the Ferry Schoolroom (see Education) but it was not very satisfactory. The building was in a very poor state of repair, cold and with little furniture, and although they only used it one day they had to pay 15 shillings a year rent.

Another Wesleyan Methodist Chapel was built at Neyland in 1850 this could accommodate 157 seats of which there were 70 free. Sunday Services were held at 10 30am and 6pm with an average attendance in 1851 morning 50 + 30 scholars, evening 100 + 15 scholars. Thomas Evans was appointed Steward, he was a Joiner and lived in Neyland. It was built between Hazelbeach and Neyland close to the Shore and because it was exposed to all the harsh winter winds of the Haven was very cold. When the Chapel was built the population it would cater for was said to be about 200 but they miscalculated, when it was built, the direction and size in which the town would expand. At a meeting held in the Wesleyan Chapel Pembroke Dock on Saturday 5th May 1877 it was agreed to build a new Chapel, and trustees appointed for the building. They were Rev. J. Harris, Rev. E. H. Maidment, Mr. G. Coppleston, Mr. Skyrme, Mr. Jones, Mr. Williams, Mr. Brown, Mr. R. Rees, Mr. J. Green, and Mr. A. Traylor.

It was to be built in 1877 in the Romanesque style with a gable-entry plan and leaded round-headed windows.

The Foundation stone was laid by E. Lort Phillips at 3pm on 21st May 1877 and the Pembroke Dock Chapel Choir attended. The architect appointed was Mr Ladd at a commission of 3% of the total cost of the building and he offered to donate £5 of his commission to the building fund. The total cost including £100 for the value of the ground rent was expected to be £1039.

The architect was requested to apply for tenders for the construction but when, at a meeting at Pembroke Dock, the tenders were opened they were all over the estimate and the decision was postponed for a week to enable methods of obtaining additional funds to be considered. Finally the tender of Messrs Wilkins and Young was accepted on 23rd July 1877 with the proviso that work was to start immediately. Work did, but maybe too quickly as later a deduction was made on the amount paid to the builder because of the omission of the Damp Proof course in the foundation of the building.

Soon after, one of the guiding lights on the move to build the new Chapel, Rev. E. Maidment left the circuit.

The List of Trustees who signed the lease is as follows:-

The new Chapel was opened on 15th July 1878 and Mr Jones was appointed Chapel Steward but there were problems.

The Trustees were not satisfied with the quality of the work.

The Contractor and Architect were summoned to a meeting with the trustees at which the following points were raised:-

The trustees were not satisfied as to the strength of the roof (this had to be strengthened in 1893).

There were problems with the Cornice, the thickness of the walls did not meet specification (buttresses had to be added in 1893), problems with the partitions in the schoolroom, no damp course installed, defective hinges on the pew doors and the floor boards which should have been 1 1/4 inches thick were only 1 1/8".

In the original lease of the land permission had been given for the construction of a Chapel Caretakers house, in 1884 (10th Dec.) the Trustees applied to Mr. Phillips for permission to build a Minister's House instead.

The Chapel was licensed for marriages in January 1887 although the Chapel did not have a safe to keep records in and had to use a deed box. The Trustees agreed to give a Bible and Hymn book to the first couple married there.

There were still unresolved problems with the building and, at a meeting on June 23rd 1893, it was agreed to strengthen the present building and provide additional accommodation in it, partly by the installation of a gallery, although later there would be complaints about the behaviour of children in the gallery during services. It was also considered as to the feasibility of erecting a new Sunday School and suitable classrooms. There was some delay in approving the plans and raising the funds but work, with the exception of the new schoolroom was undertaken in 1897. By 1922 it was found that the windows were in a very poor state and that year new windows were fitted by Camm & Co. of Birmingham at a cost of £105.

A Baptist Chapel was built in Honeyborough in 1840. acc to Baptist Historical Sketches Rev. R C Roberts 1907

Messrs. Wilcock, James Jones and Thomas Roberts of Hayston; all three members of the Baptist Church Pope Hill obtained permission in 1835 from Mr Magdon the schoolmaster of the school at Waterston to use the schoolroom on Sundays for Services The first who preached in the schoolroom was Mr. Henry Williams of Sardis; and the second was Mr. John Williams of Bethany, Pembroke Dock, who subsequently became a minister in New Zealand. The Rev. James Hughes Thomas , Molleston, was also among the early preachers at Waterston

Honeyborough Baptist.

After a short while Mr. Harris, a Home Missionary was appointed to take charge and the congregation gradually increased. It soon became apparent that a larger purpose built Chapel was necessary, so some members of the congregation approached Mr. James of Honeyborough, requesting him to let them lease a piece of ground on which to build a Chapel. Mr James granted them a lease for a number of years at a very nominal rent. Mr William Rees, solicitor, Haverfordwest, who was very well known for the practical interest he took in the new churches springing up at this time in the county, prepared the necessary conveyance. Meanwhile services were held in a barn in Little Honeyborough, as the accommodation at Waterston was insufficient and a Sunday School established which was well attended. As there seemed that the Home Mission was indefinitely delayed the building of the Chapel was much needed , Mr Evans formed a committee of a few members they undertook the work, and by their co-operation they had the joy of seeing their "Hephzibah" as they named it, opened for Divine Services. This took place in the year 1840. The Chapel was subsequently handed over to the Committee of the Home Mission, who provided the preaching supplies for some time. The new Chapel could accommodate 200 free seats 130 other 70.

The first minister of the Church was the Rev. D. J. Morgan of Sardis. He was succeeded by the Rev. Thomas , Pope Hill. He was followed by the Rev. Samuel Burn who had the oversight of the Church for five years. Following Mr Burn, comes the name of the Rev. Thomas D Matthias, during which time the Chapel was enlarged and the interior re-arranged. The Rev. James Williams, later of Beulah, Dowlais, succeeded Mr Matthias, and ministered to this Church for three years. In January 1874, the Rev. William Gay settled here as minister of the Church. He left in 1876 for Yorkshire where he became minister of the Baptist Church, Golcar, Huddersfield. In October 1876, this Church in conjunction with Sardis, gave a hearty invitation to the Rev. James Johns of Bethlehem and Salem. Rev. J John ministered to the congregation for 18 years till in 1894, he left to take the ministerial oversight of Horeb Baptist Church, Blaenavon, Mon., where he died June 1896 at the age of 47 years. His body was brought from Blaenavon, Monmouthshire, and was laid to rest in Sardis burial ground. In 1895, this Church invited the Rev. David Lewis to minister to them.

By the year 1904, much needed renovations and repairs were required to the Chapel which necessitated massive fund-raising but such was the enthusiasm that at the reopening service they realised even more than they actually required.

The present Chapel, dated 1904, is built in Simple round-Headed style of the gable entry type. The deacons in 1907 of the Church were:-

Messrs. James Davies,

Charles Jones,

Edward Harries,

Caleb Bevans,

John Jones,

William Edmond,

Thomas Thomas ,

James Hire and

James Thomas .

The assistant preachers were Messrs. G.H. Biddlecombe and J. Wilcox.

Bethesda Chapel (Baptist) formed in 1863.

A Baptist Chapel was built here, and a Church formed about ten or eleven years prior to the above date. A man named Peter Scurlock leased a piece of ground from the Lawrenny Estate, situated near the Railway Station, where a Chapel was built in 1850 for Baptists to assemble for divine worship. There was seating accommodation for 240 with an average general congregation, in 1851, of 73 with 70 scholars. Mr. John Edwards was listed as the Manager, he was a Leading Man of shipwrights. The following eleven trustees were elected: Messrs John Jones, Honeyborough; Thomas Evans, Neyland; W. George, Barn Lake; John Edwards, Neyland and Benjamin Scurlock, Thomas Brown, John Molland, John Mumford, Owen Jones, John Griffiths, William John of Pembroke Dock. That seven of the eleven trustees were from Pembroke Dock, and connected with Bethel Baptist Church, Bush St., and it is presumed that Bethel Church took some part in initiating and supporting this Chapel. But it only existed for about seven years, for in 1858, Mr William Rees, solicitor, Haverfordwest, acting on behalf of the Church and trustees, sold it to the Great Western Railway Company, who wanted the property for their own use, as its closeness to the newly built railway with the extensive traffic would render it inconvenient, if not wholly impracticable for its original purpose as a place of worship. After the liabilities of the Chapel were paid, there was a balance in hand with Mr Rees of £178 4s 10d. which he invested in interest for the Church until a suitable site and building were secured. Four or five years however elapsed before any practical steps were taken.

In 1862, a lease of the present site was granted by the Lawrenny Estate for 99 years at a ground rent of £1 a year to Mr. David Reynolds. New trustees were elected, a Chapel built at a cost of £367 6s. 2d. and opened in 1863, and the Church was constitutionally formed. The money from the old Chapel which Mr Rees had invested, together with the interest, considerably reduced the debt on the new Chapel. The first minister of this Church was Rev. Ebenezer Edwards, who formally settled here in May 1864 but he resigned in March 1865. In August 1865 the Rev. David Lewis, who had completed his studies at Haverfordwest College, was ordained minister, he served until July 1871. For fourteen months after the resignation of Mr. Lewis, the Church had no minister. In September 1872, Rev. Morgan Humphrey Jones, who also studied at Haverfordwest College, was ordained its minister and stayed for five years. Again a Student of Haverfordwest College was chosen. Rev Joseph Watkins Edwards, was ordained here September 1878, he died in March 1888, and in November 1888 Rev. David Howells was invited to become minister, he resigned in December 1893 to become the minister of Penrhiwceiber Baptist Church. In June 1894, the Rev. Benjamin Chubb Evans took oversight of the Church. During this time a new and more commodious Chapel was felt to be necessary. For some years they had been collecting for this purpose, and it was felt that the time had arrived for them to rise and build. So, in the spring of 1902, the foundation stone was laid, and in October 1903, the Chapel, capable of holding 600 persons was opened for Divine worship. The estimated value of this property was £2000. The new Chapel, stands in front of the old one.

In 1907 according to returns to the Association its Church membership was 292.

Neyland Calvinistic Methodist Church (Zion)

The Neyland Chapel was built in the year 1861 and opened in the September of 1861. Its first deacon was Mr John Hughes of Leonardston Farm, brother of the Mr James Hughes of FrogHall, who had been a well known deacon of the Church at Wiston. Mr John Hughes, like his brother, was born and bred a Calvinistic Methodist. Before the building of the Chapel, a Sunday School had been established as far back as 1859. It was held first in the house of David and Mary Ann George, Charles St. Afterwards the school was removed to a larger room in the house of one John Evans, in the same street, where it remained till the opening of the Chapel. Among the first children who attended the school were Thomas and James and Mary Ann Woodcock. Mrs Woodcock was a member of the Church at Pembroke Dock, but the family had removed to Neyland, and she was transferred and became the senior member of the Neyland Church. Other names given as among the first scholars are George, Margaret, and Sarah Williams, the last named becoming Mrs Evans, of Bufferland, Pembroke Dock., also Mr. Peter Evans, Neyland Valle . The superintendent was Elias Harries, Pembroke Dock. He was accompanied by Mr. Theophilus Jones, Mr. Joseph Merriman and others. He had done similar pioneer work before at Burton. The same brethren also conducted prayer meetings on Sunday evenings, and occasionally on week evenings in the house of Mr John Morgan, a goods guard on the Great Western Railway, who came from Kidwelly, Carmarthenshire, to Neyland after the completion of the line to what was then called New Milford.

When the Chapel was opened, Elias Harries brought over the choir of the Pembroke Dock Chapel.

The opening service was conducted by the late Rev. Moses Williams, then of Carmarthen. The Rev. W. Powell and Rev. Lewis Evans were also present; and the Rev. David Howell of Swansea preached on the occasion. Mr. Williams was asked and decided to remove from Carmarthen to Neyland. He commenced his ministry in September 1862.

In addition to Mrs. Woodcock, Mr. and Mrs. John Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. John Hughes, already named, the Church was joined early by Mr. Caesar Evans, Mr. and Mrs. Llewellyn, Waterston,

Mr. and Mrs. George Davies, Mr. John Griffiths, Mr. Patrick, Church Lake, Mr. Taylor, Mr. Snoddy, and several others. Mr. Powell and Mr. Lewis Evans visited families to encourage them to join the Church.

The Church in Neyland made good progress, and in ten years, it needed improved accommodation and a room for the Sunday School.

These alterations included the installation of a gallery with a harmonium, a schoolroom, new pews, and a new pulpit. The renovated Church reopened on Sunday, 26th of November 1871 when the Rev. William Powell, Pembroke preached in the morning and the collections amounted to £25/5/-. Cost of the total renovation, together with the harmonium had been £350. But in March 1874, the Rev. Moses Williams left and he was succeeded by the Rev. T. M. Davies, then of Haverfordwest, came to be minister of the Church at Neyland, where he remained till 1881. He was followed by the Rev. Thomas Morgan, who held the ministry from 1882 till 1888. Both Mr. Davies and Mr. Morgan went to Australia. The next minister of Neyland was the Rev. J. R. Hughes, from 1889 - 1894, and he was followed by Rev. B. P. Morris, from 1895 - 1905. It was during this latter period that, a house in John Street was bought for a manse.

Following after the first deacon of the Church Mr. John Hughes formerly of Leonardston, but latterly of Hazelbeach, where he died about the year 1890, Mr. John Morgan, the guard, and Mr. John Griffiths were added to the diaconate. Later on in Mr. Davies' time Mr. G. E. Stephens and Mr. Jas. Llewelyn were selected for the office followed by Dr. Symmons and Mr. Rees. The next elected to be a deacon was Mr. John Edwards and shortly afterwards, Mr. Walter Evans and Mr. Wm. Davies. In 1904, the following were elected deacons, - G. E. Stephens, F. Davies, Vaughan Aveston, Morris Evans, and John Potter. September 1911, the following were chosen, - Thomas Evans, son of the late Caesar Evans, D. O. Jones, the choir master, J. Myers, and Stanley Williams.

The Bicentenary Memorial Congregational Church.

The Church was established in January 1862 with a membership of 18 which soon grew to 80. In July 1864 the foundation stone of the Chapel was laid by Mr. H. O. Wills, and was opened in 1865. The first Minister, Rev. T. Davies of Morecambe came in 1867 and remained until 1871. He was followed by the Rev. E. Griffiths (1872 - 1879) who left for the USA. In 1880 came the Rev. Owen Jacobs, who left for Albany, Haverfordwest in 1887. The Rev. W. Powell succeeded him in 1888. The latter died in January 1925 having served the Church for 37 years. He was followed by the Rev. T. O. Jones (1928 - 1939) and the Rev. G. Tegfryn Williams (1940 – 1948).

Memorial Congregational United Reformed Chapel was built in 1864 in the Simple Gothic style of the gable entry type. By 2010 this Chapel had been converted for other use.

Hazelbeach Non-denominational Mission Hall was built c.1900 as a small corrugated-iron hut. This Chapel was still in use in 1993.

Neyland Cemetery Chapel was built in 1898 by architect Hugh Griffiths of Pembroke Dock, with stone rendered walls, slate roof and dressed stone window and door surrounds.

Roman Catholic Church, Church Lane, Neyland

Neyland Chapel is a mid-late twentieth century Roman Catholic Church. It is built of Asbestos-blocks with a gable-entry plan. by 1993 this Chapel stood disused.

Population, People & Events.

(Facts and figures).

It is difficult to accept figures for population before the first Census as there seems to be so many different calculations used as to the average number of people in each households, some say four, some say four point two. What is also disturbing is that in one hundred years according to the statistics, population can double 31 households in 1563 to 71 households in 1670 and yet for the next 130 remain relatively stable increasing by one household only, yet records show that there was some industrial development during that period

The population given for 1801 was 386 which slowly increased over the next ten years to 484. In 1814 saw the start of the Dockyard at Paterchurch, large numbers of tradesmen moved from other dockyards to the area, some labourers moved off the farms with the hope of securing better paid less seasonal work. Accommodation was at a premium. A new town was springing up at Paterchurch, people were so desperate for accommodation that they were moving into houses before the floors were put in. Some of the houses were very overcrowded others were so small there wasn't really room to "swing a cat" Workmen were travelling up from Milford by boat, and from LLangum, so it is not surprising that the population of Llanstadwell, just across the water, nearly doubled in the next ten years. It would appear that very strong links built up in those early years, as, in the Directories of the time, Llanstadwell and Neyland are included with Pembroke Dock. From then till the start of work on the railway terminal the population increased by about one hundred every ten year period until by 1851 it had reached 905. By 1861 coinciding with the establishment of the Railway terminal at Neyland and the Steam Packet Service the population had increased to 1745 and carried on increasing by another 800 in the next ten years then by approximately another 500 per ten years till it reached 3641 in 1891. In 1900 the Neyland Urban District was formed from part of the old district of Llanstadwell.

When it comes to people:-

In 1325 Alexander Robelyn held lands from the Lord of Haverfordwest at Honyburgh (Honeyborough), the rent for six months was £9 1s 0d Pipe Roll 7 Edward III M45 He had died by 1327 and his heir was a minor. Pipe Roll 5 Edward III M63

1652 March - plague was rife in the area - Newton, Waterston and Honeyborough were places specifically mentioned. (The bodies of several young sailors wrapped in their hammocks were discovered buried in the mud near the site of the Cleddau bridge during construction. It is thought they were victims of bubonic plague and could have been buried secretly to avoid the ship being quarantined. One had a coin of 1650 on him - is it a coincidence that Haverfordwest and Llanstadwell was visited by the bubonic plague in 1651/52?

1690's Charles Dolson of Llanstadwell refused to take the oath of allegiance to the King - he was in good company - so did among others, Essex Meyrick of Bush and Sir John Barlow of Slebech.

1734-63 - Thomas Bowen gent., of Jordanston mortgaged his property for £2,350. He owned land in Lampeter Velfrey, Crinow, Llanrheithan and Haverfordwest.

1767 April 21 St Thomas Jenkins of Llanstadwell, a labourer, found guilty of stealing money was condemned to death but was pardoned by the King and transported to America for fourteen years.

William Rees of Middle Scoveston Llanstadwell married Esther Scone of Hodgeston - she was born 25th Dec. 1812 and died 6th Oct. 1884.

In 1841 it was stated that the average annual expenditure for the maintenance of the poor of Llanstadwell is £267.13s. unfortunately it does not give further details.

At the time Lewis wrote "in the vicinity are several good houses, of which there are within the parish, Jordanston, the property of the Rev. Thomas Wilson; Hayston, the residence of R. Matthias, esq.; and Newton a dilapidated old house on a valuable estate belonging to Lewis Child, esq.."

Fenton in 1810 describes Newton boasting of the most delightful views of the harbour, now the comfortable residence of Lewis Child esq.. retains nothing of any pristine dignity in the point of habitation, but possesses, what is of infinitely more importance than a few ruined arches to exercise the fancy of the antiquary, a soil of the first quality, which the present proprietor, as a judicious and discerning agriculturist knows how to appreciate, and cultivates with spirit and success

The Child family held estates at Begelly and John Child of Begelly was Sheriff of the County of Pembroke in 1724 he is believed to have married Prudence Brown of Bristol. The family also had strong links with the Philipps of Picton Castle.

Richard Matthias of Hayston was involved with the Society for the Encouragement of Agriculture and Internal Improvement in the County of Pembroke and was a prize winner at the shows.

NB

In 1853 according to Mason the weather was just as unreliable as it is today:

"The Field Day in the summer of 1853 was announced to be a special one. The troops of the royal Dockyard Battalion, all volunteers from the Pembroke Dock Dockyard workforce, were to be conveyed across the water with every equipment for service. The day arrived with a beautiful fine morning, which induced thousands of spectators to cross over to Neyland, Milford and Haverfordwest also furnished their quota. Shortly after noon, a great number of boats loaded with soldiers, shot out from the Dockyard, crossed over to the north side of the Haven and landed on the beach between Neyland Point and Church-lake. The regiment formed up with field guns and marched with the splendid band to a field at the gale near great Honeyborough. It was a sight to remember. The battalion was drawn up in line in an oblong space reserved for the review ground, and an immense concourse of people surrounded, the ladies dressed in their lightest summer attire and straw hats being conspicuous among the gentlemen. The battalion went through various evolutions splendidly, and at about 3.30pm, the field guns were being exercised and several rounds fired.

The first concussion of this firing produced a slight rain, and as the firing went on the sky assumed a black, threatening appearance, which suddenly broke out into a terrible thunderstorm. Vivid flashes of lightening flew in every direction and the rain descended in a devastating rush, which scattered the people to seek for shelter. This could not be found, there being only a few houses near at hand. Everybody seemed to be almost immediately saturated, and the ladies looked most pitiable in their wet flimsy garments. the review was cut short, and the battalion limbered up guns and marched off the field en route for their boats, to re-cross to the Dockyard, but when they reached the road, which had become a quagmire crowded with people going in the direction of the beach, the scene could only be likened to the final attack of the French at the battle of Waterloo. "They got mixed." It was impossible to keep anything like formation, and the word was passed to "Get to the boats the best way you can." The result was that about a third did not reach the boats, some went directly home and others found themselves in Haverfordwest."

The parents of Sir William Thorne ex-Lord Mayor of Cape Town (who for eminent service was one of those selected to receive King Edward the Seventh's Coronation honours) lie in the north west corner of the Churchyard. The headstone informs the onlooker that Mrs. Thorne was born Celia George (Hook) in 1806, and died at Llanstadwell in March 1879, and John Thorne died 14th September 1882, aged 81.

Education.

1807 The Sunday school was discontinued through lack of funds. (Was this held in a little schoolroom by the Church as Mason suggests that there was such a building in use).

1847 The State of Education in Wales Parish of Llanstadwell (including Neyland)

The letter which I annex from the Vicar of this parish(one of the trustees) will explain how, in the respect of educational resources, it may be said to be magnas inter opes inops.

The payment by Lord Milford referred to in the ledger is mentioned in C.C.R.P739

Dear Sir Pembroke, January 20th 1847

Ever since my appointment to the Vicarage of Llanstadwell (1812) I have never heard anything of the payment of £5 per annum from the late Lord Milford towards the support of a school, except from the Report you allude to. If ever paid, it ceased being so long before my time.

Few parishes stand more in need of some regularly established school than this does, but unfortunately there is no opulence in the parish to set such a thing going, or to support it when established.

The late Mr Mathias of Hayston, by his will gave effects to be sold for the establishment of a district school for Llanstadwell and Rosemarket, which produced a very considerable sum, but with law expenses &c. dwindled down to £1278 19s 1d in the 3 ½ %, and is now in the control of the Accomptant General, producing about £44 11s 9d per annum, the interest of course , accumulating

Although the money is thus placed, there are considerable difficulties existing as to the establishment of it. The clerical trustees are the ministers of Steynton with the Clergy of the two parishes. One difficulty was some time that the Vicar of Steynton would not act, but that is now removed, as the present Vicar has consented to do so. But the main difficulty is the procuring a proper site (as the will says it shall be central), and then to obtain funds for building a proper schoolroom , with dwelling house attached. This difficulty arises from the trustees not having the power to lay out a shilling in purchasing or in building. There is an eligible spot belonging to me as Vicar, but I cannot alienate it except by sale. Thus we are at present situated: in the mean time the district is without the beneficial effects which would probably result from this munificent endowment.

I rather object to obtaining a system from a Master in Chancery, as it would reduce the funds still more, and therefore we must wait to see what may turn up.

I have in my hands a sum towards building, contributed by a benevolent individual. And make no doubt we should obtain means had we a proper site.

I have &c

Thos. Owen

Llanstadwell

I had some conversation in this parish with Benjamin John and William Edwards, teachers in Hephzibah Sunday school which I visited on the 10th of January. It was a bitterly cold day, and hardly any scholars present. They said that in the district between Steynton, Rosemarket and Williamson there were upward of 200 children to be educated of whom “not half – not above five of six in every score” were attending a day school. Agricultural labourers were getting 6s or 7s per week on their own finding, or 3s with food, if employment was secured to them all the year round. Dockyard labourers got 12 s. Many of these lived on the opposite side of the water to Pater. At morning and evening they may be seen ferrying over in large numbers. As to existing schools, there were “none worth mentioning”

Neyland Ferry School

The roof, walls and floor of this schoolroom were in a bad state of repair. There was only one window in it, and the door was left open to give light to those in the upper part. It opened to the east, and rendered the room very cold. A pan, with coal, between the window and the door served as a fireplace, but there was no chimney nor ventilation, unless the holes between the tiles of the roof may be called so.

One Masters desk, one table, one chair and five benches comprised all the whole of the school furniture. The master, a stout healthy man kept his scholars in good order, and was highly spoken of in the neighbourhood, 30s a year are paid for the miserable school room – 15s by the master and 15s by the Wesleyans to keep a Sunday school and hold religious meetings in it. The scholars were mechanics' and labourer's children. 14 of them read a part of the first chapter of St John's Gospel, several with ease, and answered questions from it correctly.

Waterston School

The roof and floor of the schoolroom were in bad repair. The master appeared to be a good tempered man and his scholars, who were farmers and labourers children, conducted themselves with great propriety during my stay in the school. The furniture consisted only of tables and six benches. The second chapter of St John's Gospel was read tolerably well. They could answer no questions from it. Did not know the name of the capital of Great Britain – Waterston is in parish of Llanstadwell in the county of Pembroke.

The scholars performed operations in the simple rules of arithmetic correctly, but failed to do a sum in Compound Subtraction 1847 WM. Morris Assistant 1853 The government offered a "capitation" grant for each pupil as well as assistance for buildings and advantage was taken of this.

1870 - Education Act prescribed that where voluntary efforts had failed to provide an efficient school a School Board should be elected to supply the need.

1870 December - Llanstadwell ratepayers applied for a School board - The meeting started at the British Schoolroom Pembroke Dock but it was so cold they transferred the meeting to the National Schoolroom and the school was started.

By 1884 Kelly's Directory lists a Board School for 200 boys, average attendance 130; William George Aswell, master. 120 girls, average attendance, 90; Miss Bessie M. Davies, mistress and 120 infants, average attendance 112; Mrs. Mary Ann Bishop, mistress. The Infant's school was being enlarged.

Employment.

L. Morris surveyed the Milford Haven in 1748, of this area he wrote:

"This is the place where Sugars from Ireland are discharged and pay the English duty at Pembroke; and here Woollen Yarn from Ireland is imported; Milford Haven being one of the open Ports allowed by Act of Parliament. At this place there is also a Salt Refinery, which supplies the whole County." He suggested some improvements "Here might be made a Dock, a Mile and a Quarter in Length; and vessels might lie at the Dock head in Four Six or Eight Fathom Water." [This was one hundred years before Brunel had the same idea].

There was therefore some industrialisation taking place. The site of the salt refinery is believed to have been at Barnlake and there is a suggestion that there was a wharf there too.

An Act of Parliament 32 George II chap. 30 passed in 1757 authorised the purchase of land for the Haven defences and a committee composed of the magistrates of Pembrokeshire and other influential gentlemen of whom Lord Milford of Picton Castle was considered the principal was empowered to select sites and carry out the necessary work. Three sites were selected and purchased:- Paterchurch 65 acres 3 roods 1 pole; west Llanion Point (now known as Hobbs Point) 34 acres 2 rood 25 poles; Neyland, Limpet Hill 23 acres 35 poles for which £2,713 17s was paid. Work was commenced but the declaration of peace on 10th February 1763 caused the work to be abandoned in a half complete state. Lewis in 1843 records that it was once contemplated to build a Dockyard where later the Railway terminus was built and certainly two ships were constructed there. In 1780 a frigate was built for the Government, called "Milford" and in 1784 the "Triumph" a 74 gun ship was also built, by contract. The yard was managed by a family named Scurlock. From the 1800s onwards, there was still a small amount of shipbuilding being undertaken mostly vessels under 100 tons. Seven ships were built in the 1820s but the total tonnage was only 297 tons and in the 1830s ten ships were built of a total tonnage of 993 tons, after that period only two or three were built every ten years.

The area must have been very different then as the majority of the houses seemed to follow the shoreline.

A very good Inn stood on the Point, and some good houses occupied the sheltered terrace, running from the Point to the edge of the wood northwards. This area and the houses were later taken over by the Great Western Railway Company. There were two roads from the point one northwards as indicated following the route of what is now High St, and the other following the shore to the west. There were several cottages scattered on the margin of the two roads especially on the west road leading to Milford via Llanstadwell and Hazelbeach. The North road passed through the "Gale" (a couple of houses) to Haverfordwest via the large village of Great Honeyborough, which contained a good many cottages a couple of farmhouses and "Honeyborough House."

There would have been a good number travelling over each day to the Dockyard at Paterchurch as in 1847 agricultural Labourers working in Llanstadwell were paid 6s or 7s per week on their own finding (supplying their own food) or 3s with food. Just over the water at the dockyard Labourers received 12s per week and tradesmen considerably more.

With the advent of the railway all changed.

The South Wales Railway had originally intended to run the railway line to Fishguard but because of increased costs and the potato famine in Ireland the management turned its attention to a nearer alternative access to tidewater. Originally the Act of Parliament of 1845 had stipulated a branch from Whitland to Pembroke and the Royal Dockyard but because of legal problems over obtaining land from local landowners this had not been progressed with, also as by 2 January 1854 they were already at Haverfordwest it would be considerably cheaper to head for the nearest convenient location on the North side of the Haven. Brunel opted for Neyland and the extension of nine miles from Haverfordwest to Neyland was opened as a broad gauge, single-line branch on 15 April 1856. Pontoons used to build the Saltash bridge were floated round to form a floating landing stage to load and unload the Irish Packets which continued to use the port till the opening of Fishguard in 1906. During the season immense quantities of mackerel were brought here by steamer from the Irish coast, and forwarded by rail to the London and other Markets. The South Wales Hotel was built immediately adjacent to the new terminus of what became the Great Western railway and was situated on rising ground overlooking Milford Haven; with ornamental grounds between the hotel and the station. Large numbers of houses were built to accommodate the increase in population. Steamers left Neyland for Waterford every day after the arrival of the passenger train from Paddington due to arrive at 1.50am and also left on Mondays after the arrival of the train due at 6.50 am. Steamers also left Neyland for Passage and Cork every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday at 8.30 pm.

The Ferries to Pembroke Dock ran every quarter of an hour through the day, fare - single 2p - return 3p.

For a time the Great Eastern was moored here but comparatively little Atlantic Shipping would call due to lack of deep water frontage.

Neyland continued as a Railway terminus and Locomotive Depot until 15th June 1964.

Miscellaneous Jottings

Scoveston Fort is a polygonal ditched and ramparted fort, 212m north-south by 215m, having diminutive bastions at its Angles. The entrance faces south-east. It is depicted in outline with the legend 'Fort (in progress)' on the Ordnance Survey County series map in 1868

Fort Scoveston

This fort was originally intended to be the central work of the Northern line defences of Milford Haven, consisting of six works covering the northern land approach. Scoveston was to cover likely approaches to Neyland and Milford Haven. It was commenced in 1861. In 1880 it was described as an excellent work, in good order, only requiring minor modification of parapets for the reception of the standing portion of the armament but there is no evidence that guns were ever mounted. A hexagonal work with sides 130 yards in length, it is surrounded by a dry ditch 36 feet wide at the bottom with an escarp of masonry 22 feet high. The counterscarp is cut from natural rock. It is flanked with one double and four single caponiers on two storeys with access over a rolling bridge and tunnel through the gorge. The work is enclosed by a rampart with chemin des rondes, covered way and glacis. It was planned to mount 32 guns on the ramparts and had accommodation for 128 men in bomb proof barrack rooms, together with a main magazine and stores. The rear faces are protected from reverse fire by a parados and a traverse thrown across the interior parade. One source states that it was never armed and no armament is shown on the 1886 RA and RE Works

Committee armament return. For most of its life it served as barrack accommodation or stood empty under a caretaker. During WWI the fort became the main camp for troops manning extensive trenches and fieldworks between Weare point and Port Lion. A large number of hutments were constructed within and outside the fort to serve a training and transit camp. It was abandoned after WWI and was sold to the local farmer in October 1932 for £1,400. During WWII it saw active service once more as an AA gun battery was fitted and was used by the locals as an unofficial air raid shelter. It was used to store large quantities of ammunition during the build up to the Normandy landings. After WWII it was abandoned once more and is now empty, derelict and much overgrown. The caponiers are intact and relatively dry. Their intended armament appears to have been machine guns. The terreplein is devoid of gun emplacements but the expense magazines were constructed. The main magazine survives and shows signs of having been fitted with racking for ammunition.

Llanstinan

Topographical Dictionary of Wales - S. Lewis 1839

Llanstinan, a parish, in the poor-law union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Dewisland, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 2½ miles (S. by W.) from Fishguard; containing 170 inhabitants. Its name appears to be derived by contraction from that of the saint (Justinian) to whom the Church is dedicated. The parish is pleasantly situated on the road from Haverfordwest to Fishguard, and is bounded on the north by the latter place, from which it is separated by the western Cleddy river, whose source is in the vicinity; the parish of Llanvair-Nant-y-Gove lies on the south, that of Llanynchaer on the east, and that of Jordanston on the west. It comprises a large portion of arable and pasture land, for the most part inclosed, and producing rich crops of wheat, barley, oats, and grass; all kinds of wood, also, grow in great luxuriance. The scenery is pleasingly varied, and the views from the higher grounds embrace extensive prospects over the adjacent country, which abounds with interesting features. The ancient mansion of the family of Symmons, after being suffered to remain in a neglected state for some time, has been modernised or rebuilt; and there are several other good houses, adding considerably to the general effect of the scenery, which is also much enlivened by the course of the Cleddy river, running with many beautiful windings towards Milford Haven in another part of the county.

Slate-quarry

is worked, giving employment to two or three hands.

The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant; net income £100; patron, Col. Owen. The Church is not distinguished by any interesting architectural details. There is a place of worship for Calvinistic Methodists, in which a Sunday school is also held.

1870-72, John Marius Wilson's Imperial Gazetteer of England and Wales

Llanstinan, a parish in Haverfordwest district, Pembroke; on the west Cleddan river, 2 miles S of Fishguard, and 11½ NW of Clarbeston road railway station. Post town, Fishguard, under Haverfordwest. Acres, 1,579. Real property, £1,332. Pop., 174. Houses, 36. The property is divided among a few. Llanstinan House belonged to the Symmons, passed to the Owens, and was recently restored. The living is a rectory in the diocese of St Davids. Value, £100. Patron, Col. Owen. The Church is dedicated to St. Justinian, and was restored in 1869.

A Church consisting of nave 30ft by 15ft, chancel 27ft by 12 ft, south transept 9ft by 12ft, south door and single Bell cote at the west end. The chancel arch is plain and pointed, as is that of the south transept. The chancel communicates with the transept by a vaulted passage 12ft long and 6ft wide. The transept also is vaulted. The font basin is 21 ½ in square, 19 in internal diameter and 6in deep, it has a circular base; it has been repaired with cement. It may date from the Norman period, but appears to have been altered.- visited 21st June 1915.

Pembrokeshire Church Plate J T Evans 1905

Llanstinam (S. Justinian). — An interesting Elizabethan Chalice, bearing the Hall Mark of 1596 with maker's Mark Afi linked. There is a cup by the same maker preserved at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.. The Llanstinan Chalice is an example, though not a good one, of the shape of vessel which succeeded the usual Elizabethan design. The bowl which is quite plain, is V-shaped and rests on a baluster stem. The measurements of the Llanstinan chalice are as follows: height, 5 in.; diam. of bowl, 3in., of foot, 2 in.; weight, 5 oz. 10 dwts. There is no Paten cover but the chalice is in good condition.

A Chalice and two Patens of electro-plate, presented by the Rev. Henry Miles.

There is also a pewter Bowl similar in shape to that belonging to Llanwnda, and carrying the same maker's Mark, diam., 8 in.. These bowls may have been in which the priests used to wash their hands just before the Prayer of Consecration, a custom practised long after the Reformation.

The Old Parish Churches of South West Wales by Mike Salter 1994.

The narrow chancel and south transept with a squint are covered with pointed tunnel vaults. Probably the walls are 13c, the chancel arch being a plain pointed opening, but the few narrow windows are all of later date. The font is Norman.

From Mrs Eastham's brief history of the Church:

This little Church has the only known pre-conquest foundation dedicated to St Stinian or Justinian, believed to have been the friend and spiritual companion of our patron St David in the sixth century. Built within a Llan of earlier date it consists of a nave and Chancel with an enlarged squint linking the south transept to the chancel, a feature believed to have been associated in Pembrokeshire with hermitic use. It is constructed mainly of Preseli stone with some local slate and a change in the masonry from the lower to upper courses of the walls indicates where the original Church was rebuilt in the Middle ages. A Gothic window at the east end of the sanctuary was replaced in the 18c by a square stained glass one, in domestic style, when the other windows in the Church, two in the chancel, two in the nave, and one in the south transept were installed. These too are all domestic in style and of three separate designs. At the same time a staircase from behind the pulpit to an upper level above the nave appears to have been ripped out. A change in the structure which was probable associated with alterations in the level of the roof. There is a nice early font and of the two memorials inside the Church, one is dedicated to the Rev. Henry Miles, a very long serving vicar and his wife and the other to little Fanny Owen who died at two months old in 1835. There are long-eared bats in the rafters and a variety of fern species find foothold in the ancient walls. Isolated today, the churchyard was once the centre of the village of Scleddau, which appears beside it on George Owen's map of 1603. Outlines may be seen in the field of the houses and cottages and there are Rambler roses in the hedgerows. The remains of the old school lay inside the ancient enclosure, beside it and away from the memorials to local families, a pair of rough-hewn bluestones, one inscribed T. O. record two local suicides of the 19th century.

2006 Llanstinan Church, North Pembrokeshire close to the A40, this little Church is tucked away across the fields and almost lost from view in its overgrown, circular(Celtic)churchyard. It is only very occasionally used for services and cobwebs festooned the pews and a piece of the ceiling had fallen down.

£25000St Justinians Church, Llanstinan comprises a Grade II Listed Medieval Church situated in an isolated rural environment approximately 1 mile from the village of Scleddau and some 3 miles from Fishguard.

Pembrokeshire Parsons

This Church was appropriated by Bishop David Martin on 22 Feb., 1302, to Martin Robert de Trefdn, the precentor's vicar, to be annexed to the subchanterhip of St Davids Cathedral in perpetuity, but reserving to the Bishop and his successors the right to present a curate to the Church, and also a suitable provision for such curate out of the tithes of Llanstynan. — (Stat. Menev.)

The sub-chantors of St Davids Cathedral were the rectors of Llanstinan. — (Owen's Pem.)

In 1291 this Church was assessed at £5 6s. 8d. for tenths to the King, the sum payable being Ins. 8d.

— (Taxatio.)

No valuation of this benefice is given in the Valor Eccl., which, however, states that the College of St. Mary near the cathedral of St Davids received from the Church of Llanstinan £4 13s. 4d. per annum.

Under the heading 'Not in charge':— Llanstinan Cur. (St. Justinian). Subchanter of St Davids Patr. £4 certified value. — (Bacon's Liber Regis.)

Under the District Church Tithes Act of 1865, this benefice was, by an instrument dated 20 Dec., 1866, made into a rectory.

Village School 1847

On the 21st of January I visited the above school. It was held in a substantial schoolroom built in the corner of the churchyard. The schoolmaster informed me that a grant was made to the building of it by the National Society. It was not furnished on the National plan. The only furniture there was a long table and two small benches. This table when I entered was covered with earthen pots belonging to the master, who also uses the building as a dwelling house. In one corner of the room was a wretched bed supported by two small benches. There was a small fireplace in the room. The children were not present. The master some years ago had been master of one of Mrs Bevans Charity Schools, but had left that situation with the expectancy of getting the endowed school at Llanfynydd Carmarthenshire, of which he is a native. David Lewis Assistant.

Mining Llanstinian - Manganese & Slate

Fishguard Manganese Mine .. Reported locally to be those workings on south side of Esgyrn Bottom (at SM 96913426), 500 yards north east of Pantywrach, where a level approx. 10 ft wide by 7 ft high is driven south with a small spoil heap on the hillside below; although the level has all the appearance of a slate trial and the spoil heap is composed of poor slates and shale with no trace of manganese ores. At work from 1889 for a short, unspecified, period. Underground features yet to be investigated fully; some minor plant (tram wagons) believed to survive.

1839 -A slate-quarry is worked, giving employment to two or three hands.

Sites of Interest

RCAM. Castell -

This is a circular enclosure about 500 yds south of the parish Church. The only portion of the surrounding bank which still remains has a height of 6 feet, with a drop of 10 feet to a ditch now about 4 feet deep. The entire work is hidden by dense undergrowth, and the rampart to the north and west has disappeared. Apparently the entrance was to the east. The enclosure had a diameter of about 220 feet. The field on which it stands is known as Parc y Castell. visited 22 June 1915.

Y Gaer Penbicas -

About 300 yards west of Penbicas house and standing on a field still known as Y Gaer are the slight remains of an earthwork. The south eastern part of the bank has been levelled, but the remaining portion for a length of 270 feet is fairly intact. The bank rises to a height of 5 feet and falls 11 feet to an external ditch which is hardly perceptible. The site is almost hidden by gorse - visited 18 June 1915.

Llantood Llantydy (Llan-Iltyd)

Topographical Dictionary of Wales 1839 Llantood,

Llantydy (Llan-Iltyd), a parish, in the union of Cardigan, hundred of Kilgerran, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 3 miles (S. W. by S.) from Cardigan; contains 300 inhabitants. This parish derives its name from the dedication of its Church to St. Iltyd, an eminent teacher of Christianity, who died about the close of the fifth century. It is pleasantly situated in the north-eastern part of the county, near the separation of the two great roads leading respectively from Cardigan to Fishguard and Haverfordwest; and comprises a large tract of arable and pasture land, of which the whole is inclosed. The surrounding scenery, though not marked by any peculiarity of feature, is generally pleasing; and the views over the adjacent country are agreeably diversified. The living is a vicarage not in charge, annexed, with that of Monington, or Eglwys Wythwr, to the discharged vicarage of St. Dogmael's: the tithes have been commuted for £125 payable to the impropriator, and £32 to the vicar. The Church is not distinguished by any architectural details of importance. John Jones, in 1729, bequeathed a rent-charge of twenty shillings towards the relief of poor persons not receiving parochial aid, which until some years back was annually distributed according to the will of the testator.

At the crossways farther on we are a matter of 500 feet above the sea, with Monington village on our left, and the Church and ruined Castle of Llantood away to the right.

The Church closed to services in 2012 owing to the dangerous condition of the Bell-cote gable end.

St Dogmael's priory was founded by Robert Fitz Martin 1113>1115 it became an abbey in 1120. Pill Priory founded by Adam de Roche around c1200 and Caldy founded by Geva mother of Robert Fitz Martin founded between 1113 and 1115 were attached to St Dogmael's

St Dogmael's had 720 acres in 1291 but there are no figures for Caldy or Pille

The assessed value given for Pille in 1291 was £24 4 11d but no figures for St Dogmael's and Caldy

In 1291 Llantood belonging to St Dogmael's - value £4 0 0d

Since the dissolution of that house, it has been in the patronage of the crown.

RCAM – The Parish Church dedicated to St Illtyd.

This Church was entirely rebuilt in 1884, though doubtless on the old foundations. It now consists of nave, chancel, north porch and single Bell cote above the western gable. The font – an almost square basin 20in by 19in externally and 14 ½ internally external depth 18in with slight chamfered and curved angles, slopes off to a modern pillar and base. Erect against the west wall of the nave is a carved sepulchral slab bearing an incised cross, the arms of which are enclosed within a design of fleur de lys. It is of 14th century date. In its design, execution and excellent preservation, it stands out favourably amongst the mortuary monuments of the county. In the porch have been preserved two corbels bearing male masks, probably of the same period as the slab; also a plain stoup –visited 30th July 1914.

Castell Felin Ganol

This earthwork is situated on the left bank of the river Pilian, here the boundary between the parishes of Llantood and Bridell, and about 250 yds to the south of felin ganol farmhouse. It is placed on a tongue of land which drops sharply to the streams on both sides of the headland. The neck of the promontory is defended by a strong but somewhat ruined rampart 300ft in length. The bank rises to a height of 10ft and falls 15ft to a partly rock hewn ditch, now much obliterated. The entrance at the eastern end of the bank has been much altered. The extreme point of the camp has been scarped. The enclosed area has a length of 180 ft and a width of 190 ft. Below the camp to the south is a house known as “Castell” – visited 4th August 1914.

Castell pen yr allt

A fine and well preserved mount and Bailey earthwork standing 300 yds north east of the parish Church. The motte has a height of some 8ft and a summit diameter of 30ft. The Bailey, a circular plateau of 8ft in height is placed to the north of the mound' it is surrounded by a rampart and formidable ditch, averaging 30ft from crest to floor. The ditch is 10ft wide, it was scarped and counterscarped. To the south the ground falls steeply to a strong spring of water. In 1864 it was stated by a neighbouring vicar that he remembered remains of an old stone tower about 30ft in diameter on top of the mound. At present the summit displays no signs of buildings – visited 30th July 1914.

Caer

Only the slightest traces remain of an earthwork on a field of Pen y gaer farm, and on the left bank of the river Pilian. So far as the work can be traced it would appear to have been a narrow rectangular enclosure running east and west. The north rampart has a present height of 3ft; that to the south can just be discerned. The western bank is lost in a hedge, and has disappeared entirely. The spot is still locally known as Y Gaer – visited 5th August 1914.

Rhyd y garn wen

The name of a house two thirds of a mile north of the parish Church, near a Ford across a stream. Nothing is known of a cairn or tumulus having stood here. In the fields east and south of the house are two erect stones which appear to have no Archaeological import. They are whitewashed.

--visited 29th June 1914.

Croes y forwyn

A farm half a mile south of the parish Church. The source of the name, "The Virgin or Maiden's Cross" is not apparent.

Parc y Mynach

The name of a field between the farmhouses of Ffos y bontbren and Felin ganol about half a mile east by north of the parish Church. Local tradition asserts that on this field, or in the dingle on the east side, formerly stood a Chapel. The tenant of Felin ganol, when ploughing, has for some years been on the lookout for foundations, but so far without success. Both places may have been connected with the Monastery of St Dogmaels – visited 4th August 1914.

Castell Pen-Yr-Allt, Llantood RCAHMW

Earthworks thought to represent the remains of a medieval Castle. These include a banked and ditched, generally polygonal enclosure, about 52m north-west to south-east by 50m, tapering to about 30m on the north-west. It rests on steep natural slopes on the south-east, with its ditches springing from natural declivities. Where the enclosure faces rising ground, to the north-west, the ramparts are now greatly degraded but are thought to have been doubled, whilst on the south-east the ditch is represented by a ledge above the natural slopes. Set rather off centre in the southern part of the enclosure is a ditchless steep-sided sub-circular mound, some 16-20m across & 2.4m high, having a summit area about 9.0m in diameter. It is possible that this mound represents the remains of a free standing circular masonry tower. J.Wiles, RCAHMW, 22 March 2005

Llantyd,

(Acc/to the Topographical Dictionary of Wales. - S. Lewis 1834.)

Llantyd - (Llan - lUtyd), a parish in the hundred of Kilgerran, county of Pembroke 3 miles SW by S from Cardigan containing 281 inhabitants. This parish derives its name from the dedication of its Church to St Iutyd, an eminent teacher of Christianity who died about the close of the 5th century. It is pleasantly situated in the NE part of the county near the separation of two great roads leading respectively from Cardigan to Fishguard and Haverfordwest and comprises a large tract of arable and pasture land of which the whole is enclosed. The surrounding scenery though not distinguished by any peculiarity of feature is generally pleasing and the views over the adjacent country are agreeably diversified. The living is a vicarage not in charge, annexed with that of Monington or Eglwys Wythwr, to the vicarage of St Dogmael's in the archdeaconry of Cardigan and diocese of St. David's endowed with £200 royal bounty. The Church is not distinguished by any architectural details of importance. John Jones in 1729 bequeathed a small sum of money towards the relief of poor persons of this parish not receiving parochial aid, the interest of which is annually distributed according to the will of the testator. The average annual expenditure for the support of the poor is £77 18s.

Llanvyrnach

A parish in the hundred of Kemmes, county of Pembroke 8 miles SW from Newcastle-Emlyn containing 979 inhabitants. This parish, which derives its name from the dedication of the Church issituated in the NE part of the county, bordering upon Carmarthenshire and comprises an extensive tract of land of which the greater portion is enclosed and cultivated. The surrounding scenery though not characterized by any peculiarity of feature is generally pleasing and in some instances picturesq.ue. The soil though inferior in fertility to that of other parts of the county is not unproductive. An extensive common, connected with Precelly mountain, rises to the west of the village but an enclosure of land was made in the parish a few years ago.

Lead mines

On the banks of the river Taf and at no great distance from its source, are some extensive lead mines, which were formerly worked with great success but for some years the works have been suspended.

The living is a discharged rectory in the archdeaconry of Cardigan and diocese of St David's rated in the King's Books at £10 and in the patronage of the King as Prince of Wales.

The Church dedicated to St Brynach is not remarkable for any architectural details of importance.

There are places of worship for Baptists and Presbyterians.

On the common above the Church are four large erect stones, visible at a great distance, marking out, according to tradition, the graves of two chieftains who were slain in a desperate battle which is said to have been fought near the spot; and near the Church is a large tumulus which is supposed to have been surmounted by a Castle or fort to defend the pass. There are several mineral springs within the parish but their peculiar Properties have not been ascertained. The average annual expenditure for the maintenance of the poor is £194 9s.

Llanwnda,

Llanwnda is a rural village and historical parish to the north of the Welsh county of Pembrokeshire and part of the community of Pencaer. It lies some two miles northwest of the port of Fishguard and is inside the boundaries of the Pembrokeshire Coast National Park.

To the north of the village is the rocky outcrop of Garnwnda, which was the site of a French soldiers' camp during the Battle of Fishguard. On the north side of Garnwnda is a prominent cromlech excavated by John Fenton in 1847.

A fascinating hamlet with a boulder-strewn rough "village Green" (with remnants of stone circles on it?) and a simple unpretentious bellcote Church. There has been a Church here since early Christian times, and Asser the friend of King Alfred, was educated here. There are a number of inscribed stones in the vicinity, and prehistoric remains are abundant. There is a suggestion that the village green may have remains of a stone circle on it.

1833 Lewis' Topographical Dictionary of Wales

Llanwnda (Llan-Wyndav), a parish in the hundred of Dewisland?, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 2 1/2 miles (North. west.) from Fishguard, containing 1046 inhabitants. This place appears to be of very remote antiquity, and the adjoining district is supposed to have been a favourite resort of the ancient Druids. That there was a principal station for the solemnization of their rites is plainly indicated by the number of Druidical remains that are scattered over the parish and Throughout the vicinity, and also from various adjacent spots which still retain the names "Llan Druidion," "Fynnon Druidion," and others of similar import and origin. Near Fynnon Druidion were found five instruments of flint, supposed to have been used in flaying the victims devoted to sacrifice; and in the Valle below is a circular earthwork, marked out by a solitary erect stone, probably to defend the pass of a small stream by which it is skirted, and perhaps also to protect the avenue to the consecrated region. According to tradition, an ancient town called Trêv Culhwch is said to have existed here at a very early period, of which evidence is frequently obtained in the foundations of ancient buildings which still obstruct the plough in various parts of the farm on which it is situated.

About the year 1076, Trehaern ab Caradoc, Prince of North Wales, led his forces into South Wales, for the purpose of subjecting this country to his dominion, and at Pwllhgwttic was boldly encountered by Rhys ab Owain, the reigning prince, with all the forces he could levy: here, after a Long and sanguinary conflict, Rhys was at length defeated, with the loss of most of his army, and being himself closely pursued by the victor, he was at length taken prisoner with his brother Howel, and both were put to death by Trehaern in revenge for the murder of Bleddyn ab Cynvyn, which they had previously committed.

The French effected a landing on this part of the coast in the year 1797, and, after plundering the inhabitants for some time, the soldiers becoming insubordinate through excess, their commander found it necessary to make an unconditional surrender to the local forces brought against him by Earl Cawdor.

The parish is pleasantly situated in the north-western part of the county, and is bounded on the north by St. George's Channel, and on the east by Fishguard bay, forming a promontory with a bold and precipitous shore, and indented by several small bays, the soundings within half a mile of the coast being from seven to twenty fathoms. The surrounding scenery is diversified with features of romantic grandeur; and the views from the higher grounds embrace extensive prospects over the channel and the adjacent country, which abounds with objects of interest. Off the north-western coast, in Garregonnen bay, are two small islets of a similar name. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of St Davids, rated in the King's Books at £3. 5. 2 ½ d, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Precentor and Canons in the cathedral Church of St Davids, to whom the rectorial tithes are appropriated.

The Church, dedicated to St. Gwyndav, is not distinguished by any architectural features of importance. There are places of worship for Baptists and Calvinistic Methodists. William Hugh, in 1778, bequeathed £20 to the poor not receiving parochial relief.

A strong chain of well-connected forts, extending in a direction from east to west Throughout the whole length of the parish, is said to be of British origin: that on Garn vawr rock comprises an extensive area, enclosed by strong ramparts of uncemented stones, on the most accessible parts, flanked with portions of the rock which project in the form of natural bastions. On the summit of the Hill above Goodwick pier is a rocking-stone, weighing about five tons, and so nicely poised as to yield to the slightest pressure. A little beyond it are three remarkable cromlechs in a right line, of which two have been overturned, but one still preserves its original position. Another cromlech stands on the ledge of rock just above the village, the table stone of which is fifteen feet in length, nine feet in width, and of an average thickness of two feet; and to the west of the site of the ancient town of Trêv Culhwch are the majestic remains of several cromlechs, of which one, more perfect than the rest, has a table stone fifteen feet long, eight feet wide, and two feet and a half in thickness. On opening a cairn, in 1826, for the purpose of widening a road near the sea, in this parish was found a brass instrument, about nine inches long, with a circular ring at one end, and a flat triangle at the other, and pierced with two round holes in the neck which connected these together; it is now in the possession of D.O. Lewis, esq., of Swansea, but no satisfactory conjecture has been offered as to the use to which it was applied. Near Trêv Asser, in this parish, is a tumulus surrounded with a moat, which, on being opened some years since, was found to contain fragments of urns, and other indications of its having been a place of sepulture.

Trêv Asser is said to have been the birthplace of Asser, the friend and biographer of Alfred the Great. The celebrated Archdeacon Giraldus Cambrensis, who attended Baldwin, Archbishop of Canterbury, while preaching the crusades Throughout the principality, and is better known for his literary works and numerous ecclesiastical appointments, was for some time incumbent of this parish.

The poor are supported by an average annual expenditure amounting to £382. 7.

There is no resident Clergy. It is an agricultural parish with labourers receiving 6d to 8d a day with food and 1s a day on their own finding. There is no resident land proprietor with day school provision for education of the poor of but almost all go to Sunday school. Many of the population can read but not write.

Nooks And Corners Of Pembrokeshire* 1895 Timmins

Llanwnda little out-of-the-way village. The Church stands in an isolated position overlooking a piece of rough ground that does duty- as village ' Green," a place scattered over with Gray tumbled stones that seem to group themselves into the lines of rude hut-circles. Two or three low thatched cottages, that might pass for Irish cabins, appear to have been ' dumped ' down haphazard, and look old enough to have seen Giraldus Cambrensis when he held the benefice here.

Built in a strong, simple manner well-suited to its exposed situation, Llanwnda Church has some characteristic features. Above the western gable rises a low double Bell-cot, while a similar but smaller erection for the sanctus Bell divides nave from chancel roof. As we enter the low- browed porch, we espy a cross of archaic type carved upon a stone slab in the outer wall; and two similar crosses are to be seen upon the exterior of the chancel gable.

The nave retains its dark, oaken timbered roof, having a rudely carved head upon the eastern side of one of its ancient beams. The openings to the rood-loft are now blocked up, but at the time of the French incursion these apertures afforded a hiding-place to a servant - maid and child, who peeped out in trepidation whilst a gang of ruffians played havoc in the sacred edifice, setting fire to everything inflammable they could lay hands upon.

After some little persuasion Mary Reece, the sprightly nonagenarian care-taker, is prevailed upon to produce the communion chalice for our inspection. This little vessel has a history of its own, having been stolen by a Frenchman, who endeavoured to dispose of it at Carmarthen, trying to pass off" the word Llanwnda engraved upon the cup as La Vendee, a name of France. The chalice, which is much cracked and dented from the rough handling it has undergone, bears upon the exterior the inscription : poculum ecclesie de Llanwnda.

Church St Gwyndaf

The Church of St Gwyndaf is a Grade II listed building

- small bellcoted Church with strange severed head wooden carvings on the roof beams.

Giraldus Cambrensis held living in 12c. It was restored in 1870's.

There has been a Church on the site since pre Norman days the monk Asser later an adviser to King

Alfred and co founder of Oxford University, was educated here.

Outside the Church there is an incised Dark Ages grave slab with what appears to be a head, there are also inscribed stones from c600AD, a Holy well and Pilgrims crosses.

Neolithic burial Chamber.

The Pembrokeshire Coast National Park by Dillwyn Miles

The Church serves the wide headland of Pen-caer with its scattered farmsteads and cottages. It has a double bellcote and sanctus. There are 5 cross incised stones built into the exterior wall of the Church, one of which has a stylised human face. During the French invasion of 1797 a French Officer stole the chalice and, when trying to sell it in Carmarthen said that he had brought it from France and that the inscription LANVNDA was a rendering of La Vendée. Below is the rugged coastline of Pen-caer, a peninsular having many prehistoric remains including burial chambers at Garnwen, Penrhiw, Garnwnda and Garn Gyllwch, and an Iron Age fort on Garn Fawr. The French landed at Carreg Wastad on this coast.

1994 The Old Parish Churches of South West Wales by Mike Salter 1994.

Much of the Church is of 1881. The north aisle containing a rood-loft staircase and porch are both vaulted. Features of interest are the two piscinae, the crosses on the chancel walls and the head of a priest on a 15c roof beam.

1921 RCAM 1921 The Parish Church Dedicated to St Gwyndaf.

The Church was rebuilt in 1881 on the earlier foundations. On plan the structure shows a chancel 23 ½ ft by 14ft nave 20ft by 14 ft, north aisle 18ft by 8 ¼ ft south aisle 22 ft by 8ft, a south porch 8ft square. The north aisle and porch retain their vaulted ceilings, and a single trifoliated lancet in the north wall of the chancel has been reconstructed. The porch has a peep hole to the south aisle, and stone seats. In the wall of the north aisle or Chapel are the remains of a stairway, and near by is a rude corbel. The font is, 19in, internally, 15in square with a depth of 10 ½ in. It stands on a plain shaft and base of two steps. A stone bench runs along the west wall. Two piscinas, discovered during the reconstruction have been inserted, one a plain circular bowl in the south wall of the chancel; the other square in shape in the east wall of the south aisle, which would seem to have been its original position in what may have been a chantry Chapel. Some of the medieval roof beams have been utilised to the present nave and on one of them is carved in high relief the head of a tonsured priest which appears to be of the early 15th century date. The Bell-cote is double; a sanctus Bell cote remains above the east gable of the nave.

(Glynne Notes (Arch Camb 1897 p47)

Crosses

Built into the exterior walls of the chancel, where they are showing signs of weathering, are several crosses discovered during the restoration of the building.

A Cross of which the lower arm was probably intended to correspond in length with the upper, but has it made a trifle longer. The cross is enclosed within a margin which follows the outline of the inner figure, thus making the design into that of a double lined cross; the outer measurements are 19 in by 14 in.

This cross is 17in by 10in; it bears “three transverse bars distinctly marked at the head of the cross, two being possibly intended to Mark the 'titulus' or inscription over the head of the Saviour” (Westwood). These transverse bars are more probably intended for a rude canopy above the crosshead.

A plain incised cross with a single line border and rounded head; 16in by 9 ½ in in measurement.

A fragment bearing what is probably part of a plain incised cross of single lines within a circle, but having the two remaining quadrants divided into unregular spaces intended to represent rough cusps – This could not be found.

An incised and ornamental gravestone which was found buried in the wall of the parish Church in 1881 and of which the late Professor Westwood gave the following account in Arch Camb for 1882 p 104. “the portion of the stone which still remains is 54in long and 18in wide and is marked with a large rudely formed face surrounded by four parallel lines forming the outline of the face; above which is a St Andrew's cross, each limb of which is also formed of four straight incised lines. Below the face the incised lines are continued obliquely on each side representing the shoulders of the figure, the space between the face and the shoulders forming a triangle. There is a certain irregularity in the arrangements of the lines although the general effect appears at first sight to be uniform. The figured portion of the stone is 36 in long. This stone is set in the outside of the east wall of the south Chapel.

Ecclesiastical Figure

Found by our Assistant Inspecting Officer on the day of his visit underneath one of the sittings in the south transept but unnoticed by any previous writer, is a fragment of what appears to have been the carved capital of the churchyard cross. It shows part of the figure of a cleric his right hand raised in blessing, his left clasping a staff. The upper part of the head and feet are unfortunately missing. The height of the fragment is 9 inches.

Fragments

On a stone ledge inside the porch and above the outer entrance, are two loose fragments of stone bearing carved work. They are possibly portions of the carved cross head just mentioned; or may be parts of the crosshead conjecturally restored and illustrated in Arch Camb 1899 p 43 – visited 18th May 1921

The populated area was Goodwick and Llanwnda Church is still out in the relatively unpopulated country. Goodwick has its own St Peters Church, originally a daughter Church of Llanwnda and built for the influx of mainly English speaking families associated with Fishguard Harbour and the GWR.

Llanwnwr Chapel and Burial Ground.

This is the larger and more important of the two Chapels subordinate to Llanwnda Church mentioned by Browne Willis in his parochiale wallicana. The site was in or close to the fold yard of the farmhouse of Llanwnwr 2 ½ miles west by north of the parish Church. A considerable number of flag lined graves have from time to time been brought to light in the yard, and after rain the outlines of burials can be traced. In 1883 on the occasion of the Cambrian Archaeological Association visit to the place, one of the graves was opened; it contained to be not more than a foot deep. Some of the others was said to have contained ashes as well as bones.

Cross Incised Stone

Standing against the front of the farmhouse is a cross stone which was removed some years ago, from the granary steps. It carries a plain cross within a circle, the lower limb being extended beyond the circle. Its entire length is 22in; the diameter of the circle is 14 ins and the overall height 63 in.

St Degan's Chapel

The second of the two Chapels named by Browne Willis. It stood on the exposed cliffs in the north of the parish, nearly two miles north of the parish Church. The site is still known as Parc Capel and faint traces of the foundations are at times to be seen in the grass near a natural outcrop known as Cnwe St Degan. Fenton (Tour 20) in whose time ruins of the little building were visible, preserves a copy of a letter written to Brown Willis in 1720 by Henry Goffe, subchanter of St David's Cathedral-- “ There is a remarkable habit of this St Degan, preserved for several ages: the person that has it now having had it in his custody for 40 years, to whom it was handed down by an elderly matron of upwards of ninety years of age. This habit, a piece whereof I have sent you enclosed, I had the curiosity to see; it is much in the form of a Clergymans cassock but without sleeves. There were to of them of the same make nearly a yard in length but having the little slit or hole at every corner on each end, and on the brim of each side were loops of blue silk” Fenton adds “ the veneration for this little duodecimo saint is hereditary among the inhabitants of this district When very young I recollect an old man who said he remembered the Chapel up, and in a part of it then roofed, the saint's sacred vest was preserved and shown, which was purchased by a stranger travelling in those parts; with the removal of his robe, the fame of his sanctity died away” – visited 18th May 1921.

The Church of Lanwodaf [Llanwnda] with its appurtenances was granted by Bishop Anselm to the Chapter of St Davids Cathedral, and this grant was confirmed by Bishop Reginald Brien on 18 May, 1352. — (Stat. Menev.)

Described as 'Llanuda,' this Church was in 1291 assessed at £16 for tenths to the King, the sum payable being £1 12s. — (Taxatio.)

On 10 July, 1656, an order was made by the Trustees for the maintenance of Ministers under the Commonwealth, granting to Adam Hawkins, the successor of the late Stephen Love at St. Mary's. Haverfordwest, £16 5s. from the tithes of Llanwnda.

Under the beading 'Livings Discharged':—Llanwnda V. (St. Wnda). Visit. quolibet tertio anno, 1s. 2d. Syn. quolibet anno, 4d. Habet altareg. and oblat. Chantor and Chapter of St Davids Patr. And Impr. Clear yearly value, £14. King's Books, £3 5s. 2d. - (Bacon's Liber Regis.)

The accounts for the year 1490 of William Waryn, the Communarius of the Cathedral, shows that the tithes of Llanwnda were then leased to Master Thomas ap Howell, at the yearly rent of £8, payable to the Chapter, and £8 to the vicar of the Church. On 2 July, 1550 a lease of the tithes and the advowson of the vicarage was granted for 40 years to Arnold Butler of Janston [Johnston] Pems., at a rent of £16, which included the vicar's stipend, and on 28 July, 1565, a lease of the rectory of Llanwnda (the vicarage excepted) was granted for 4 years at the same rent to Gellie Mericke of South Hooke, Pems., gent., the term to commence at the termination of the previous lease given to Arnold Butler. In 1626 John Mericke of Monkton Pems., esq., obtained a lease of the tithes for 21 years, at a rent of £16 for which he paid a fine of £66 6s. 8d. and in this instance the advowson of the vicarage was reserved to the Chapter.

On 25 July, 1668, the Chapter granted a lease of the rectorial tithes of Llanwnda to William Wogan, of Grays Inn, Middlesex, esq., and Dame Elizabeth Jacob (the widow of Sir John Jacob, of the City of London, Knt., and Bart, deceased) who in or about that year married her co-lessee, the term granted being for the lives of the two lessees and of Hugh Wogan, gent., the youngest brother of William Wogan, the reserved rent being £16.

According to Canon Payne's MS., Sir William Wogan, judge of the Great Sessions for the three counties, obtained in 1697 a lease for 21 years of the tithes, the rent being raised to £24, but in this case the stipend of the vicar was paid by the Chapter. On 25 July 1704, William Wogan [of Llanstinan, the nephew of the previous lessee] obtained a renewal of the lease, for 21 years at the same rent, and this lease was renewed in July, 1734, for 21 years at £15 6s 8d rent, by John Symons of Llanestinan, who inherited the property of his uncle, William Wogan. On 26 July, 1749, John Symons paid a fine of £66 5s. to renew the lease for another 21 years, and in July, 1770 he paid another fine of £105 to renew the lease for 21 years.

On 4 June, 1881, a faculty was obtained for the restoration of Llanwnda Church.

Browne Willis in his Paroch wall mentions two Chapels, called Capel Degan and Llanwnnewr, as subordinate to Llanwnda, the former being dedicated to St. Degan and the latter to St. Gwynswr.

Referring to Capel Degan, Fenton's Pems. says, "Upon the edge of a cliffe overhanging a small creek in this parish are the almost obliterated remains of a Chapel dedicated to St. Tegan or Degan."

The site of Llanwnnewr Chapel was evidently in or close to the yard of the farm of that name, and it is clear from the large number of graves that have been found in the farmyard that the Chapel must have been of some considerable importance. As described a few years ago to the writer by the occupant of the farm, the sides of the graves were formed of flag-stones set an edge, and covered by one or more flag-stones. It was quite a common event, he added, for an animal to break through into a grave.

MH Feb 2006 Salem was situated on the road to Strumble Head and I am told that the graveyard is still in existance behind a tatty modern bungalow called Salem. It is not possible to see it. Apparently the Chapel just fell down

1848 Cromlech at Llanwnda Arch Camb John Fenton

The cromlech is placed on a sloping angle of rock called Carnwnda, at a considerable elevation above the level of the surrounding country, and high above the Church of the parish: the latter lying from it at no great horizontal distance.

The greatest length of the upper stone, from east to west, is 13 ft, and from north to south 9 ft 7 ½ in. The height above ground of the only supporting stone, which is towards the northern end is four ft 3 in. The superincumbent stone has evidently been moved forward from its original position; and the principal supporting pillar to the north, and the only one upon which it now rests, in front, is much further in than at first while the end of the upper stone to the south, has, in consequence, declined so as to touch the smaller stones which originally encircled the cistvaen, and which probably were not the old supporters.

I attribute this alteration to the cromlech having been at some former period dug into for the sake of exploring the recess underneath, — which circumstance led me also to be cautious in making any deeper search; but from the quantity of red and black ashes mixed with portions of what seemed to be decomposed burnt bones and small fragments of very rude Pottery, which I found at the time in the hollow below, I felt no hesitation in forming a conclusion that it had been a place of interment. The upper side of the incumbent stone is free from all marks of fire, so as to render it doubtful whether it had ever, subsequently, been used for sacrificial purposes. Many displaced large stones are scattered about, some of which probably might have been supporters to the cromlech when first erected; and to the south, nearer the main rock, from which no doubt these were detached portions, there lies one, of dimensions nearly equal to that of the cromlech itself, ready as it were to have been appropriated to a similar purpose.

The stone of which Carnwnda is composed is extremely heavy and solid, and is a species of greenstone or basaltic trap, the common material of this locality.

There is a curious looking stone upon the summit of the ledge of rock to the south east of the cromlech, and overlooking it, which with a little imagination might be converted into a rock idol, and has every appearance of having been placed in its present singular position. It seems quite detached from the main rock.

It may be observed that this transition from the use of places for sepulture to that for sacrificial purposes, is to be accounted for inasmuch as it is a received opinion that the graves of heroes, and chief priests of antiquity, were ever held sacred and resorted to upon high occasions: whence also, in process of time, the subjects of such commemoration became, in the ages of superstition, deified, and might have given rise among the Druids to altar worship. The relic in question is rather interesting, because it proves the fact that churches were frequently founded where such remains existed, probably with a view to do away with the old pagan rites by substituting, upon the same spot, a monument of Christian worship.

(John Fenton. Glynamel, Fishguard, July 24th, 1848.)

1921 RCAM - Parish of Llanwnda

The parish of Llanwnda comprises the larger portion of a quadrangular shaped peninsula which juts out directly northwards from the body of the county into St Georges Channel. Its northernmost projection at Strumble Head is the nearest point of South Wales to the chief western and south western harbours – Wexford and Waterford – of the neighbouring island of Ireland. Though the northern and western sides of the peninsular extend for about four miles in their respective directions, the eastern border is no more than half the length of the corresponding western line, and the southern (or landward) boundary follows practically an oblique line drawn from Goodwick on the east to the tiny inlet of Pwllcrochan on the west with a big dent in it due to the protrusion of the southward lying parish of St Nicholas. The whole area may be said to form an irregular square of about twelve square miles.

The surface is rocky and uneven, especially towards the north side of the peninsula where the rocks rise to a height of five and six hundred feet above sea level, and develop into a line of hills stretching disconnectedly from one side of the district to another. The northern part of the peninsula between broken ground and the sea is called Pen Caer, the name being probably derived from the fine military position called Gaer (modernised into Garn) Fawr at the western end of the line of hills. Most of the eminences in the short range are crowned with a stone enclosure or cairn. The entire peninsula is open to every wind that blows, and the winter storms break over it with great violence. Along the complete length of its coast line, extending for about fourteen miles, there is no spot that affords safe landing for small craft except under favourable climate conditions, though doubtless the creek at Fishguard (or Goodwick) at its south eastern corner has provided easy access at all times.

His remarks on the prehistoric remains of this parish are of importance. They run as follows :-

“Remains of Druidical monuments and other ancient works meet you here at every turn; yet on the other side of the ridge of rocks separating the flat on the sea coast from the country to the south east, there is a spot that particularly claims attention; from the appearance of which, at present exhibiting a vast quantity of loose stones, disposed of in various forms of enclosure, scattered everywhere over the declivity of the Hill, I am led to suppose that here must have been an extensive settlement of the earliest inhabitants; a supposition I am confirmed in by the evidence of the farmer now occupying that and several other contiguous pieces of land, which with difficulty he can force his ploughshare through, such it meets from within lines of foundations branching out in all directions. Besides there is a tradition of a town having existed here, called Tref Culhweh.

The side to the west seemed to have been appropriated to druidical ceremonies from the many cromlechs, some overturned and some in their original position. There is one more remarkable than the rest; a large unshapen mass of serpentine 15ft by 8ft and 2 ½ ft average thickness; under the edges of it are placed nine or ten small pointed upright stones, embedded in a strong pavement, extending for some way round. The small supporters are seemingly fixed without any regard to their height as only two or three bear the whole weight of the incumbent stone, one of which is so pressed by it as to have become almost incorporated with it. On the upper surface of the cromlech are three considerable excavations near the centre probably intended to have received the blood of the victim, or water for purification, if (as is the most general opinion) they were used as altars, being similar to those so often mentioned by Borlase under the name of rock basins. This stone has a small inclination to the north east. Its height from the ground is very inconsiderable, being scarce one foot high on the lowest side, and on the other only high enough to admit of a person creeping under it, though when once entered the space enlarges from the upper stone having a considerable concavity. The earth below is rich and black, but that may be owing to it having been for years the sheltering place of sheep in winter. The farmer told me that, not many years ago, near this place two spear heads had been found laid across each other, and a knob of metal suspected to have been gold. That this was a favourite place resort of the Druids and Bards, the names of the surrounding places clearly indicate, as Llandruidion, and Fynnon Druidion; near the latter of which, and not far from a small cromlech and the consecrated well which characterises and gives its name to the spot were found five flint instruments having the broad end worn down to a rounded edge, and the smaller end chipped out in little hollows, to admit of a firmer grasp. They differ essentially from the flint celts found in the barrows of Wiltshire and elsewhere whose broad edges are much blunter, and narrow parts more smooth.....

A little below in the Valle to cover a pass over a small stream that skirts it, and perhaps to protect the avenue to this consecrated region, stands a circular earth encampment marked by a solitary maen hir; and more westward in the same Valle a large druidical circle with one of the encircling stones on the south side, super-eminent above its fellows, being about 11ft high above ground within its area was dug up a stone hammer.

By the very strong fortifications crowning the summits of those rocky eminences which extend from Garnvawr, the western extremity of the parish of Llabwnda to Penyrhiw eastward, and form a chain of well connected posts, evidently British, there is every reason to suppose that the country the French fixed on for making their descent was chosen for the same purpose by the earlier piratical invaders, as at the base of Garnvawr, a point of land projects into the sea, called to this day Trwyn y badau, the cape of the boats, terminating in a bold rock shaped like a truncated cone, and only accessible by a narrow isthmus on the south side of which, by a rock shelving towards the water, now much eaten away, the ascent must have been effected through a hollow covered way, still visible, protected from the sight of the camp above, and continued so as to bring them unobserved to the more accessible side of the mountain, and into the flat country to the north of it, which probably the plunderers might have got possession of.

The British post on Garnvawr a rock of no small height, consists of an extensive area surrounded by vast ramparts of loose stones and bastion like portions of the natural rock, by four or five lines on the most accessible side towards the land; but on the other sides being almost precipitous, by fewer, and otherwise strongly defended by nature; high as the situation is, there appears to have been a sunk well within the area of the camp, now filled and choked up with stones.

On the land side, about half a mile off on a furzy plain there are two remarkable meini hirion, about 300 yds from each other, erected probably to commemorate a battle fought between the natives and the invaders, as from this spot a well pitched military road may be traced up to the camp.

The gate on the high road leading from the above rude columns is called the Lady Gate, from a belief prevailing among the common people there, that treasure lies hid near, and that a lady is often seen by night hovering round as if wait for the happy person who is fated to be enriched by her discovery of the mysterious and valuable deposit” (Tour 1811 pp21-6)

Garn wen Remains

On the 6in Ord sheet “Cromlechau” are marked as standing on Garn wen headland, immediately above Goodwick harbour, at an altitude of over 300ft above sea level. In the year 1883 the Cambrian Archaeological Association visited the spot and found “in one place three cromlechs in a line directly North and South at a short distance from each other. The first of these , locally called 'Carreg Samson' has a capstone 12ft 9in in length by 11ft in breadth, and an average thickness of 2ft; the supporting stones have been displaced, but the line of the enclosing circle is distinct enough. The same remark will apply to numbers two and three. In the second case the supporting stone 6ft and 7ft in length, have given way; the capstone is 12ft by 8ft, with an average thickness of 12 in. Close to these is a well defined circle , divided by a line through the centre, and approached by a passage which pointed towards a low tumulus” (Arch Camb 1883)

Twenty years later it is reported that there were “nine cromlechs more or less perfect , a tumulus, a large circle including a hut foundation, and several standing stones. Recently a tumulus was removed by the railway men. This contained a quantity of calcined stone, some above, some below the level of the natural soil” (Pem Arch Survey)

In the last twenty years, especially during the period of the war, most of the features visible in 1883 have been obliterated. Our Inspecting Officer was quite unable to locate the cromlechs, but the tumulus and the hut circle remain –visited 2nd June 1921.

Carn Wnda Cromlech

On Carn Wnda 521ft above sea level and 300 yds south of the parish Church, are the remains of a cromlech. The capstone 11ft in length, with an average depth of 1 ½ ft and a breadth of 10 ½ ft., is still supported by one pillar standing 5ft above the soil. The other end of the covering stone rests upon rock. The cromlech was ruined before Richard Fenton's time (Tour p18) John Fenton wrote about it in 1846 (Arch Camb 1848) Sir Gardner Wilkinson F.R.S. says of it “ Beneath it is a Hollow formed by excavations in quest of treasure (and now filled with water) in which nothing was found except some sea worn pebbles and charred wood of more recent times, I could discover no trace of the basin said to be upon the capstone of this cromlech” (Collectanea Archaeologica 1871). Some years ago “excavations were made under the stone, and a small urn containing calcined bones was discovered. From the description we have obtained of the urn it was of coarse manufacture and crumbled to pieces" (Pem. Arch. Survey) visited 18th May 1921.

Gyllweh Cromlech

At the foot of a rocky protuberance called Carn Gyllwch (Ord. Maps Carn Gilfach), over one third of a mile west of Y Carn cromlech are one fairly perfect cromlech and traces of another. That marked on the 6in. Sheet, where charcoal and Pottery are stated to have been found in the year 1800, has a capstone 13 ½ ft in length 8ft in breadth and 2 ¾ ft in depth, which apparently stands on four supports about 1 ½ ft above the surface; rank vegetation may hide a fifth, and several small packing stones lie about. About 30yds to the south are the remains of a second cromlech, with a capstone 8ft in length 5ft in breadth and 1 ½ ft thick. . The supporters have fallen beneath it, one is still standing though leaning at an angle of 45degrees.

Lhuyd in his ms. Account of the district says of the second cromlech: "Less than a bowshot from Tre Gyllwch is Man y Gromlech w'ch is one yard and a half Long and 4ft broad and above 2 thick. One of the supp'rs is above 4ft high, the second about 3ft and ½; the 2 middle ones are fallen forward the 5th is abt. 3 foot".

In the field next south, known as Llain garreg hir is an erect stone , which may have been connected with the cromlechs. It has a height of 3 ½ ft above the level - visited 24th May 1921.

Y Garn Cromlech

The 6 in sheet marks the site of a cromlech on Y Garn, over one mile south west of the parish Church, and immediately east of Garn Bwlch house. The spot is so covered with gorse as to make a satisfactory examination of it impossible. There would seem to be one support in situ, about 5ft in length and now almost prostrate. The capstone is apparently gone – visited 24th May 1921.

Pencwm Cromlech

On the west slope of the headland facing Fishguard Bay, in the second field north east of Pencwm is a ruined cromlech, of which the capstone measures 17 ½ in length, 8 ¼ and 2 ½ ft in thickness. Its supporters have fallen and the spot is so overgrown as to prevent a careful examination of the chamber. The cromlech was erect and perfect some eighty years ago according to the memory of the late Mrs Clement Bowen of Goodwick. The white colouring of the stone makes it a prominent object in its setting of yellow gorse.

Serving as a gate post in the south angle of the field next west to the capstone is a fine erect stone 8 ½ ft above the surface, which has every appearance of having been connected with the cromlech. Its companion gate post is of the ordinary height, some 4ft above the soil – visited 18th May 1921.

Penrhiw Cromlech

On the field known as Parc y gromlech next north of Penrhiw farm house stands a cromlech, the chamber of which is now filled with field gathered stones. The capstone has been overthrown and lies at the feet of its quondam supporters; it has a length of 13ft 10 in and a breadth of 8ft. The supporting pillars differ from those of other cromlechs in the parish in that they are laid lengthwise and not on end, and they thus form a perfect cist or chamber. The two long stones on the north and south sides of the cist are from 8 ½ ft to 9ft in length and 3 ft above the level; those to the east and west are of somewhat smaller proportions. Although the field has been under cultivation for many years it is evident, when viewed from a short distance that the structure stood upon a low mound, and photographs of this cromlech taken about the year 1865, and now in the museum of the Carmarthen Antiq. Society show that several base stones of a superimposed cairn were then in situ – visited 24th May 1921.

Parc Hen Stone

An erect stone in the field next to and north east of Henner school house. it stands 80 in. clear of the soil, is somewhat square in form with a breadth to the north east of 58 in. It is not marked on the 6in. Sheet. --visited 18th May 1921.

Tre Sinwen Stone

In the second field east of Tre Sinwen farm house is an erect stone standing a clear 5 ½ ft with a breadth of 4 ¾ ft it faces south. --visited 18th May 1921.

Cross incised Stone

Built into the wall at the cemetery cross roads is a stone upon which is incised a cross of rude character. The cross 2ft in length is formed by two incised lines. There is no surrounding circle. It is said locally that the other corners of the cross roads bore similarly marked stones within almost living memory. The two fields at this spot are known as Parc y Groes. visited 24th May 1921
Arch Camb 1883

Llanwnda Green

On the village green, due west of the Church, are a number of stones, some of which appear to have been placed in position by human agency. Though much denuded, it is possible to trace a circle of considerable dimensions.

Sir Gardner Wilkinson F.R.S. in 1871 saw “a fence near the village of Llanwnda some large stones , but not part of a circle as some might imagine” (Collectanea Archaeologica p231) . The remark would seem to refer to some naturally placed stones which form part of a hedge west than the green –visited 18th May 1921.

Garn Wen Hut Circle

Immediately adjacent to the tumulus on Garn Wen headland is the foundation of a circular hut 13 ½ ft in diameter. It is possible, notwithstanding much disturbance to trace its outline, many of the foundation stones being still in position; some of them rise to a height of 2ft. The entrance was probably to the south. The interior is filled with debris and rank vegetation – visited 2nd June 1921.

Dinas Mawr

A typical Pembrokeshire cliff Castle, placed on a promontory about one third of a mile west of Gaer Fawr camp and defended on three sides by steep precipices to the sea; the narrow neck connecting it with the mainland is fortified by two banks 150 ft in length and 50ft apart. The banks are largely constructed of stone, and it is possible that they were originally faced, as the opening in the main rampart is approached from the outer entrance by a causeway, the sides of which (especially that on the south east) are lined with slabs. The principal rampart has a height of 4ft and a fall of 5ft to a ditch 10ft in width, now much filled in. the outer bank is slightly lower. The inner entrance has a width of 20ft, the outer 12 ft. The enclosed area is protected from the prevailing winds by the pinnacle of rock; at its foot are slight traces of hut circles. On the eastern side is a narrow winding and well worn path down to the sea. Between the promontory and a small rocky inlet to the west is a straight narrow gorge, through the sea races with force; the side of the pathway next the islet bears evidence of considerable weathering. On the east side of the promontory, between it and Trwyn y Badau, skiffs point is Ogo's March , the horseman's cave, wherer according to tradition still current among the fisher folk “a number of Danes in full armour” lie buried. – visited 25th May 1921.

Dinas Mawr, Llanwnda.

The ramparts at Dinas Mawr, Llanwnda, Pen-caer were once stone-walled and are pierced by central gateways, the inner lined with slabs. Although there are traces of at least one hut circle just inside the gate, most of Dinas Fawr comprises a towering pinnacle of rock, with little space for settlement. In instances like this, where much prehistoric effort was dedicated to defending a very restricted coastal promontory, it is hard not to wonder if there was some ritual or ceremonial use for the 'fort' positioned in a 'liminal' space between land and sea. Dinas Mawr resembles the Channel Island coastal site of La Pinnacle on Jersey, which was used for axe-making, settlement and ritual activities for thousands of years Driver, T. 2007. 'Pembrokeshire, Historic Landscapes from the Air', RCAHMW, Page 102, Figure 153.

Gaer Fawr

This, one of the most striking of the stone forts of the United Kingdom, may be said to be practically unknown to antiquaries past and present. It is also of importance as being the only one of the county early monuments of which anything like an adequate description was written over two centuries ago, when its features were doubtless far more distinguishable than they are at this day.

From the British Museum Ms Stowe 1023-4 two volumes of drawings and sketches by the celebrated Welsh antiquary Edward Lhuyd (died 1709) keeper of the Ashmolean Museum Oxford, or by one of his companions in his wanderings through the Principality Lhuyd in addition to a rough plan of the defences at Garn Fawr, appends the following account on the work :-

c1700 Description of the Intrenchment at Y Gaer M [Vawr} Pembrokeshire

The inward intrenchment from East to west is about 50 of Mr Lhwyd's paces, and from North to South about a hundred, having on the south 2 cabanes (by 'cabanes' Lhuyd means 'cabins' that is small rectangular enclosures , or hut dwellings) 3 on the west and one in ye middle. The 2nd intrenchment on ye east is about 180 paces long. The spot of ground that lyes between the 1st and 2nd wall being about the same length, but 50 [paces] broad. The 3rd Intrenchment is about 140paces in length, and the ground lying between the 2nd and 3rd id on the same but 60 [paces] broad.

The 2nd Intrenchment on ye south side is about 200 paces in length, having 3 rocks and 2 caban, and the ground between it and the first is of the same, but in some places 20, 12, and 6 [paces] broad.

The 3rd wall on ye south side is about 260 paces in length, the ground between it and the second is of the same, but in some places about 20, 12 and 6[paces] broad in which there are 7 caban.

The 2nd Intrenchment on the west is about 50 paces long, between this and the first wall on this side there is a spot of ground about 120 paces long and 60 broad, and likewise a small ingress on ye North westlying near ye rocks (which secure ye North side of ye Gaer). This 2nd wall westward hath also 2 caban. By the ingress on the west there is a small wall which runs from it northwards and under the rocks of about 20 paces in length. Tthe north side of the Gaer is altogether rocky.

The only other description of this earth work is contained in a ms. account of his visit to it about the year 1890 by Lieut-Col. W LI Morgan R.E., F.S.A., an ex Commissioner. He writes :-

“Situated on the highest point of land immediately behind Strumble Head. Several tors play a prominent part in the defence which mainly consists of two lines of ramparts connecting three tors; but on the East side, where the approach is not so steep, are three lines at varying ontervals, and further strenghtened by an earthern rampart and ditch. The stone ramparts have been so ruined by depredations of farmers for the purpose of building stone walls within the camp that it is impossible to decide what their dimensions may have been, or anything further except the direction in which they run. The camp certainly belongs to a class similar to Carn Ingli. There may still be seen the remains of hut dwellings on the South west side, and doubtless many may have been destroyed.” The geological formation is trap, and some beautiful and perfect specimens of romboidal basaltie columns are to be seen on the western tor. It is plain that loose stones were not so abundant in the interior of this camp as at Carn Ingli, and consequently the supply was insufficient, and had to be supplemented from some distance on the outside. One stone in particular was most noticable – an ordinary granite about 8in to 12 in.long evidently an erratic and brought from some distance.

The earthen ditch and rampart call for particular attentions as to whether it was part of the original camp, or an addition at some later time. At its northern extremity the rampart seems to run into and cover the outer face of the stone wall, which here is more complete than elsewhere. along the centre of the course it can hardly be considered that the stone wall could be part of the same defence as the rampart and ditch unless the former were of much larger dimensions than any other walls in the neighbouring camps which still remain perfect. The conclusion must be that the rampart and ditch were additions for some particular purpose, for the difficulty of making the ditch, owing to the nature of the ground was so great, and the ease which the stone walls could have been raised (if such additions were necessary to strengthen the defence) so obvious, that unless the ditch was absolutely necessary it would never have been attempted. Probably this was done at the time of the Danish invasion, and if the work of the invaders, the small cliff castles below were made to keep their connection with the sea.

Sling Stones

On the day of his visit our Assistant Inspecting Officer found on the south west side of the camp, just behind the short length of wall where the outer facing of it is still fairly perfect, a pocket of four sling stones – water founded pebbles about the size of a pigeon's egg. These are now in the museum of the Carmarthenshire Antiquarian Society at Carmarthen.

Flint Chips

According to Pem. Arch. Survey flint chips have been found within the walls of Garn Fawr, but no further particulars are given –visited 25th May 1921.

Gaer Fach

Two hundred yards to the east of the Hill upon which is placed the great camp of Gaer Fawr, is a lesser knoll which is crowned with a low stone wall. Lhuyd notices the camp on these terms :-

“On the east side of Gaer Mawr lyes another Intrenchment on the top of a Hill called Y Gaer Vychan having two rocks one on the north and one on the south. Its ingress is on ye west, and in a manner opposite to the ingress of the Gaer Vawr”

The stone walling is much dilapidated but it is evident it could never have been a strong wall of defence; it probably formed the enclosure for cattle of the tribe, whose fighting position was on the neighbouring Hill.

Ysgubor Gaer

At the foot of the south slope of Gaer Fawr is an oval or oblong enclosure, having well rounded corners, which, although now completely hidden beneath dense undergrowth would seem to be fairly intact. A somewhat slight bank built of loose stones and earth rises to a maximum height of 4ft. The enclosure had an entrance to the south, and possibly to the west. Its purpose is by no means evident. The name predates an agricultural origin, and the work may have been a medieval stockade.

Castell Bach

Only slight traces of this earthwork remains. It stood upon a field known as Castell Bach nessa a quarter of a mile south east of Llanferran farm house, and almost on the parish boundary line. The work at present shows a bank running north and south, having a length of 75ft and a height of 3ft; there is a slight ditch to the west. It appears to have been circular in shape, with an enclosing bank. The entrance may have been to the east. The three adjacent fields to the east and south are known as Castell ucha, Parc Castell draw and Castell bach – visited 24th May 1921.

Castell Cleddau

Slight traces of this work are visible on the farmstead of Castell, three quarters of a mile west of Llanwnda village. It was probably oval in form. Recent building operations have altered and obscured the site. visited 18th May 1921.

Castlell Poeth

Immediately north of Tref Asser cross roads is what appears to be a circular mound 30 yds in diameter slightly raised above the adjoining ground; it is surrounded by a moat 6ft to 8ft in depth and 20ft wide at the top, which at the western end is filled with water. Owing to quarrying and other operations it is difficult to classify this work. It would seem to be a medieval mound without a Bailey court. According to Lewis (Top Dict 1833) where it is mentioned as a “tumulus surrounded by a moat” it was “opened some years since and found to contain fragments of urns, and other indications of it having been a place of sepulture”. Against this theory must be placed the name “Castell” “Dancastell,” a cottage adjacent to the moat, and “Weirglodd Castell” two fields immediately north of the mound – visited 24th May 1921.

Tre Gyllwch

On the farm of this name (spelt Gilfach on the 6in Ord map) are the remains of several early enclosures of which the following description is given by Edward Lhuyd (1700) :-

“Within less than two bow shots of this Gaer Vychan, south east lyes 1 round and 5 square Intrenchments, each joined to one another, called by the neighbouring inhabitants Tre Gyllwch in the parish of Llanunda. The circular Intrenchment is about 30 paces in circumference . The square ones are of an equal magnitude; each being about 12yds long and 6yds broad.”

The site of this early settlement is not marked on the Ord sheets, and the only other allusion to it is that of Lewis (Top Dict) :- “The ancient town of Trev Culhwch”.

The enclosures are still traceable, though there appears now above the shallow soil only the foundation stones of what may seem to have been walls, which may have been quite distinct in Lhuyd's day. It is, however, pretty clear that he could not explain the appearances, and it is still more difficult at the present day to offer a probable suggestion. Possibly the site is that of a Welsh tribal homestead, and if carefully cleared and examined it might reveal the details of a Welsh

Chief's dwelling at an earlier period than has yet been met with. --visited 25th May 1921.

St Degan's Well

According to Fenton, near the Chapel site was “ a spring named after the saint; and above the said spring a tumulus called St Degan's knwe or knoll, where people resort to seat themselves on holidays and Sundays” No sign of a spring at this spot could be traced in May 1921, nor is one marked in the 6in sheet, which however, gives the name of Ffynnon Degan to a spring half a mile due south of the Chapel site.

Pen y groes

The name of a cottage which stands at the junction of three lanes one-third of a mile east of Llanferran house. The field immediately west of it is known as Llain y groes.

Tref Asser

A hamlet half a mile south of garn Fawr where Assurius Menevensis, Bishop of St David's A.D. 707 and author of the Life of Alfred, may have dwelt. In that work he states that he went to Wessex from the furthest coasts of western Britain, as his friends hoped that if he could secure the favour of the King they would be protected from King Hemeid, a petty prince of Demetia, who often plundered the Monastery and diocese of St Deguus [Dewi] and sometimes expelled the prelates “as they expelled Archbishop Novis, my relation, and myself”. While there is no doubt that Bishop Asser was a native of the parish of Llanwnda, and of the free tribesman's holding of Treff Asser, it should not be forgotten that there was also a Canon of this name who is mentioned by Giraldus as a supporter of his claims to the bishopric (De Jure, Rolls ed iii p214)

Cross Incised Stone

In 1883 at Pont yr Eglwys, about one third of a mile west of the parish Church, the Cambrian Archaeological Association was shown a “stone with a cross incised upon it” which then formed one of the supports of the bridge. Our Inspecting Officer was unable to find the stone, though the removal of the dense undergrowth might reveal it. --visited 18 May 1921. – Arch Camb 1883 p344.

Goodwick Moor

Here Rhys , son of Owain ap Edwun, was defeated and slain in 1074 by Trahaearn ap Caradog (Brut y Tywysogion). The Moor is now waterlogged and marshy – visited 2nd June 1921.

Carreg Gwastad Point

The landing place of the French under General Tate, in February 1797.

The memorial stone placed here reads --- “1797 . Carreg Goffa Glaniad y Ffancod Chwefror 22 1797. Memorial stone of the landing of the French February 22 1797.”

In a field of Carn gowil farm called Parc y Ffranewr, the body of one of the French soldiers of the revolution is said to have been buried.

Carregwastad Point; Carreg Wastad, Near Llanwnda

Carregwastad Point is the landing-place of a French force, under the command of the American General Tate, in February 1797, in an attempted invasion of Britain. The force was between 1200 and 1500 and they landed at Carregwastad Point with orders to sack Bristol and start a revolution. It is believed that the invasion was unsuccessful. In 1897, a memorial stone, Carreg Goffa (nprn 309039), was erected nearby to commemorate the event.

In a field of Carn Gowil farm, called Parc y Ffrancwr, the body of one of the French soldiers of the revolution is said to have been buried. (Source: RCAHMW, Pembrokeshire Inventory, ii, no.592). B.A.Malaws, RCAHMW, 16 September 2003.

Finds

Stone Axe

A finely polished axe head stated to have been found at Cwmfelin, now in Tenby Museum; probably to be identified with one found in this parish by a Mr Bateman, who is known to have been the donor of the specimen in the museum.

Stone Hammer

In 1859, John Fenton exhibited to the Cambrain Archaeological Association at Cardigan a “hammer of trap found in a carnedd in Llanwnda parish” (Arch Camb 1859 p 349). Nothing could be learned of Fenton's numerous antiquarian finds.

Stone Disc

On the surface at Pen Cw, now covered by the approach to the North Breakwater, was found a perforated stone disc of rough manufacture. It is now in Tenby Museum – Seen 21st May 1920.

Bronze Object

Writing in the year 1829 Dr W Owen Pughe says (Arch Camb 1855 p 273) – “in one of the carneddi or stone heaps in the parish of Llanwnda was lately found a brazen instrument unique in its kind 8 in in length” Lewis Top Dict 1833 added that it was found in 1826, on opening a cairn for the purpose of widening a road near the sea. The writer describes it as “a brass instrument, about 9 in long, with a circular ring at one end, and a flat triangle at the other , and pierced with two round holes in the neck which connected these together” Nothing is known of its present location.

Quern

The upper stone of a small quern 35 in in circumference, with a hole for handle, was found a few years ago behind some panelling in the entrance Hall of Penysgwarne house where it still remains ---Seen 24th May 1921.

Quern

The top stone of a circular quern found at Pont Iago is preserved at the farm house

Ciliau Ganol Farm, Llanwnda

Ciliau Ganol Farm is situated approx. half a mile east of the village of Llanwnda. The farm has been added to considerably over the years. Ciliau is denoted on the 19th century Ordnance Survey County Series Mapping (Pembrokeshire sheet IV 11, 1st edition, 1889) as several separate complexes. The complexes have been substantially altered and expanded, and now Ciliau Ganol Farm forms the central complex, while Cilau west and Ciliau Farm lie either side. Tracks run from the farms, northwards over Ciliau common.

Llanycefn, (Llan-Y-Cefn)

1839 Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lewis

Llanycefn (LLAN-Y-CEFN), a parish, in the union of Narberth, hundred of Dungleddy, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 7 miles (North. by west.) from Narberth; contains 449 inhabitants. It is situated at the eastern extremity of the county, where it is bounded by Carmarthenshire, which here makes an irregular curve into this part of Pembroke. At the distance of about two miles from the parish, runs the high road from Tenby and Narberth to Cardigan. Llanycefn has the parishes of Llandilo and Llanycefn Llangolman on the north, those of Llandissilio and Bletherston on the south, and the parish of New Mote on the west; and is watered by the Eastern Cleddy, which, after traversing this and other districts in a southern course, joins the western river of the same name, to form the great estuary of Milford Haven. The surface is hilly; the scenery is pleasingly varied, and enlivened by the winding of the Cleddy and some small streams which join that river within the limits of the parish. The lands are all inclosed, and in a good state of cultivation; the soil is fertile, producing barley, oats, potatoes, and a little wheat. The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £1000 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant; present net income, £51; patron and impropriator, Lord Milford. The Church, built in a mixed style of architecture, and repaired in 1841, measures fifty feet in length, including the chancel, and sixteen feet in breadth; and contains 128 sittings, all appropriated.

Llanycefn, Parish Church

The Parish Church dedication unknown

1914 RCAM Pembroke

This small Church was renovated in 1904 when the chancel and west wall were rebuilt. It consists of a chancel, nave and Bell-cote above the west gable. The tower which fell many years ago was part of the old Church. The Chancel arch is a low round-headed opening. There are remains of rood stairs and the door leading thereto also a small squint. The font is an irregular hexagon, possibly of the 15th century; the basin is circular, with a diameter of 18 inches. Traces of hinge and staple for the cover remain –visited 22nd October 1914

NB The parish is often called Cefn, of which there are several other instances in Wales, notably Cefn near St Asaph in co Flint. The Pembrokeshire Cefn is the long narrow outlier of the Prescelly ridge between Rhiw afallen and the western Cleddeau. A grant of Bishop Beck dated 1287 gives the latinised form as “ecclesia de Kevyn”

The Church was rebuilt in 1904, a tower having been removed, The font may be 15c

Described as 'Ecclesia de Kevyn,' this Church was assigned in 1287 by Bishop Thomas Beck as an endowment for the Hospital of St. Mary Llawhadden but in 1501 Bishop John Morgan granted the hospital or Chapel of LLawhaden, together with the Church of Kevyn appropriated to the said hospital, to the use of the choristers of St Davids Cathedral, who were to provide a suitable chaplain to serve the said hospital and Church.—Stat. Menev

On the dissolution of the monastic houses the Church and the tithes of Llanycefn seem to have come into the hands of the Crown, and were subsequently sold to the Stepney family of Prendergast, and afterwards came into the hands of Lord Milford . In 1631 the inhabitants of Llanycefn and Egremont Chapel petitioned the Commonwealth for an augmentation for their minister, who had but £13 6s. 8d. from the tithes of the Church, worth £28, which were held by Sir John Stepney of Prendergast, Bart and in 1649 Sir John was ordered to settle £70 as an augmentation of these livings, and those of Little Newcastle and Clarbeston.----Compound papers

There is no separate valuation of this benefice in the Valor Eccl. It was at that time united with the free Chapel of St. Mars, LLawhaden, Menckton [by Nar-berth], and Egremont.

On 7 June, 1904, a faculty was granted for the rebuilding of Llanycefn Church.

The Church Plate of Pembrokeshire. Evans, John Thomas ,

Llantcefn – A beautiful Elizabethan Chalice of the Amroth type, bearing the maker's Mark only, and the usual two bands, the upper interlacing three times and enclosing the conventional foliage, a spray being also carried above and below each intersection, whilst the lower encloses the following inscription " POCVLVM n ECLESYE DE LLAN YE KEVEN ". There are two bands of vertical Reed ornamentation, the one between the bowl and the stem, the other around the base. The stem is divided by a knob which is covered with intermittent lines. The Paten cover has disappeared.

—Besides an electroplated Paten presented by the present incumbent in 1886, there is a pewter Alms-plate, stamped with the maker's name " William Watkins " and two other marks which are illegible. There is a plate by the same pewterer at Henry's Mote.

Llanychaer,

1839 Llanychaer (Llanerch-Aur) Lewis

Llanychaer (LLANERCH-AUR), a parish, in the union of Haverfordwest, hundred of Kemmes, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 2 miles (S. E.) from Fishguard; containing 207 inhabitants. It is situated in the northern part of the county, upon the river Gwayn, which falls into the bay of Fishguard. The surface is varied, and in some parts has a very considerable elevation; about one-half of the lands inclosed. The surrounding scenery is pleasingly diversified, and from the higher grounds are some fine views over the adjacent country. The living is a discharged rectory, rated in the King's Books at £3. 6. 8., and endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant; patron, the Rev. James Williams James. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £75. The Church, dedicated to St David, is not distinguished by any architectural details of importance.

1872 Parish Church of St David's Llanchaer Glynne July 9th 1872 Arch Camb.

This Church is fast hastening to decay, and presents a sad spectacle. It consists of a nave, chancel and a south aisle or Chapel westwards joined on and no steeple. The design is curious and the work extremely rude. The walls are very low, and over the west end is a Bell gable. There are no windows on the north and other windows have been mostly destroyed or modernised. The roof is dreadfully out of repair, the furniture ruinous, and the Church disused save for funerals. There is a plain round arch between the nave and chancel, and a rude flat arch between the eastern and western divisions of the north aisle; between the chancel and the south aisle is no arch, but merely a flat beam.

C1898 The Rev T G Mortimer writes of this Church :-

“The arch between the nave and chancel was pointed. The Church was originally built in the form almost universal among the old churches of North Pembrokeshire; it consisted of nave chancel, and south transept. There was a large hagioscope or rather arched passage from the transept to the chancel (as is still to be seen at Pontfaen). At a later period, another transept to the east of the original transept and touching it was built-- I imagine as a Chapel for the family of Ciliffeth, who were very wealthy; that however must have been some centuries ago as the family became extinct in the later days of Queen Elizabeth, and the greater portion of the house, Cilciffeth was then pulled down.

Llanchaer Church was rebuilt on the old foundations about twenty years ago (c1876). The eastern transept has now a lean to roof; the other particulars are retained as far as form is concerned; but the chancel arch had been, I am sorry to say, made larger than it used to be; the arch between the transepts is retained”.

RCAM The Parish Church dedicated to St David.

This Church was rebuilt on the old foundations about the year 1876. It consists of nave, chancel, south transept, a second transeptal Chapel of later date to the east of the first, and a double Bell cote over the west gable. The font is probably of the Norman period. It has been re-dressed visited 4th

Incised Cross Stone

During the year 1923 an incised stone bearing a circle divided into four equal sized spaces by lines drawn from the centre to the circumference. And with a cup like depression in each quadrant has been found in the south wall of the Church.

Early Inscribed Stone

In the British Museum Ms., Stowe 1023 is the sketch of an inscription borne by a stone in this parish which was taken by Edward Lhuyd or one of his assistants in the year 1698. A side note to the sketch states that the stone was then “on the north side of Llanymchaeth Church” and it would appear from the drawing that it then stood upright in the churchyard, or was built into the Church wall. From a comparison with other inscriptions both in Ireland and in Wales it is evident that in the present instance the letters have not been properly read, and the following reading may be suggested: MACUDEC[C] ETI FILIUS EOROCAN. It is unfortunate to conjecture whether the stone also bore an Ogram Inscription, or was marked with a cross; the important clan name Deceti would lead us to expect the former.

Note – Llanymchaeth Church has been restored, perhaps more than once during the last ¾ of a century, and the stone, if formerly in the Church or churchyard, may have been buried or used up in the walls; or it may lie unnoticed in one of the farm buildings or fences of the parish. It should be carefully sought after.

Mynydd Kilkiffeth Tumuli

On the summit of Mynydd Kilkiffeth, at an altitude of 1,070 ft, are two sepulchral mounds, survivors of a larger group. Both are built of mountain gathered stones, the one to the east of somewhat smaller stones than its companion. Both have been opened from the summit, and both practically ruined in the operation. The eastern mound has a base circumference of 300ft and a height of 6ft; a few of the base stones are still in situ on the south side. The other mound 65 yds to the northwest has a base circumference of 250ft and a height of 4 ft. visited 1st June 1915.

Castell Caerwen of Castell Kilkiffeth.

An enclosure in Kilkiffeth Wood 500 yds north of Caerwen House. Owing to the density of the undergrowth on and around it, a thorough examination of this work is almost impossible. The defence consists of a bank and ditch drawn across the neck of a promontory; the enclosure thus formed being defended by steep slopes to the Gwaun and Pontfaen streams. The bank, which is much destroyed, appears to have consisted of earth faced with stones. The ditch is almost filled up with material from the bank. The enclosed area is about 1 ½ acres. There is little or no rampart on the verge of the slopes. The field on which the enclosure stands is known as Parc Castell – visited 4th June 1915.

Note – Fenton (tour 568-9) suggests that this was the stronghold of Daftydd Ddu who gave battle to the Normans at Morville.

Garn; Y Garn, Llanychaer

Y Garn, Llanychaer, is a gentry house dating probably from the early 17th century. It is one of the best surviving examples of the massive round chimney set on a side wall, a particular feature of Pembrokeshire. Peter Smith suggests a ground-floor Hall house, a single range with lower eaves than at present, originally thatched.

It has a three room plan with a cross passage to the south of the main Hall with a massive east side fireplace and the lateral outshuts, characteristic of this house type, on both the east and west sides of the Hall. The pointed south door of the Hall and the blocked plain door in the same wall gave onto an unheated upper end room, possibly a parlour or service room. A timber partition divided the cross passage from the lower end lofted section, now the kitchen.

The Hall is single space with 3 large oak collar trusses, the principals curved and resting on tops of walls, except the south pair which rest on renewed cross beams over the outshuts. The north truss was concealed by a plaster partition (with bramble laths), but has been exposed by setting back the partition just behind. On the east wall there is an exceptionally deep square fireplace with a massive timber lintel and stone jambs.

A range to the north is possibly an early byre, much rebuilt, and converted to accommodation.

School Building, St David's Church, Llanychaer.

The school building is a two-storey structure with an external staircase to the first floor. Originally it was a charity school founded by the well known vicar and scholar called William Gambold (1672-1728) who ran the school at Llanychaer between 1707-1709.

Additional: the building is sited at the entrance to the churchyard. The building is now roofless and most timber detail has been lost but the plan is well preserved. The ground floor is a single chamber well lit on the north side. The upper floor is another single chamber entered from the gable and with a fireplace in the gable. The surviving detail (joist beams, flat voussoired arches over openings) suggests that the building is an early C19th rebuilding of the original schoolroom. R.F. Suggett/RCAHMS/2008.

Llanychaer Churchyard School-Room

Full account

A small and sturdy but roofless stone-built storeyed building stands in the north-east corner of Llanychaer churchyard. It is reputed to have housed the charity school established by Rev. William Gambold at the beginning of the C18th.

Description

The building has single chambers on both ground and first floors. The entrance to the ground-floor room is now within the churchyard. The ground-floor doorway is offset (rather than centrally placed) to give a large chamber. The gable-end entrance to the first-floor chamber is reached from stone steps on the roadside. The chambers were well lit, both having two splayed windows in the south elevation. The ground floor is unheated but the first-floor chamber has a fireplace in the west gable with a small window alongside. The masonry detail is good with well-worked quoins and neat voussoirs above doors, windows, and fireplace. The timber detail has mostly disappeared. There are sockets for closely-set joist-beams for a ceiling over the ground-floor chamber. The windows and doors have been lost apart from a C19th casement in the upper gable. A fragment of low-pitched principal-rafter survives at the west gable with a fallen roof of Caernarvonshire slate.

Discussion and significance.

The building as it stands may be compared with a small number of surviving C18th and early C19th endowed parish school-rooms, essentially charity schools for the poor, mostly established before 1800. Many of these non-classical schools, especially those linked with the charity school movement, did not require purpose-built school-rooms but made do with existing buildings (sometimes the Church). Although parish school-rooms were rare they generally had several common features: they were often built on the edge of the churchyard or adjacent to it; several were storeyed, or at least lofted, sometimes with accommodation for a master in the upper storey. A good surviving example is the churchyard school at Llanarmon, Llyn, of c. 1800. It has a single ground floor chamber with off-set doorway and stone steps to a loft. At Gelligaer, Glamorgan, the school-room near the Church (1761) had the master's room above the school-room (measuring 22 by 16 feet).

Llanychaer parish school-room is an example of this rare but well-defined building type: the non-classical parish school of C18th origin. It is not the original school-room but a mid-C19th rebuilding along traditional lines. The reconstruction would have overlapped with the Church school movement, but it never seems to have functioned as a National School although it may latterly have become a Sunday School. Rather surprisingly it is an almost complete documentary blank. It is not mentioned in the Digest of Schools and Charities for Education (1842), as summarized in Malcolm Seaborne's Schools in Wales 1500-1900 (1992), nor is it listed in the diocesan list of Pembrokeshire Schools c. 1880 (NLW, SD/Misc/759), though the churchyard vestry and Sunday School at Llanstadwell and the old National School in Penally churchyard are noted.

summary of chronology

[1] c. 1709. School established. A school-room established by Rev. Gambold at Llanychaer may be assumed to be the predecessor of the present building. It was possibly single-storeyed with a cottage for a master in the vicinity. The parish school and an adjacent cottage seem to have been built on ground regarded as not consecrated (cf. NLW, WCC/SD/10,980/28).

[2] c. 1840-50. School rebuilt. The neat stonework, joist-beams etc (the absence of any brick) suggest a building of the mid-C19th date.

[3] The surviving detail suggests that the building was refitted in the later C19th.

[4] C20th century dereliction. In 1926 the parish school was reported to be dilapidated (NLW, WCC/SD 10,980/28).

Llanichloydog (S. David, later).—There is at the present time no plate belonging to this parish.

LLawhaden [LlanhuAdain]

The name of the village LLanaiden has been corrupted to LLawhaden.

Roman road Via Julia

There is some recent research which suggests that the Roman road Via Julia passed near or through the parish.

The village and Castle were created and owned by the Bishops of St David's. The village was once a marcher borough. Owen, in 1603, described it as one of nine Pembrokeshire "boroughs in decay".

The parish straddles the linguistic boundary, and was one of the six "bilingual" parishes mentioned by George Owen in 1603. The parish is divided east-west into two unequal parts by the Eastern Cleddau river, and this has been a fairly stable language boundary at least since Owen's time, with English speakers to the west and Welsh speakers to the east, although, perhaps in the early Industrial revolution, Welsh-speakers infiltrated the western part in the area around Gelli woollen mill.

This is an old frontier settlement, located close to the Landsker. The Castle was a fortified Bishop's residence, strongly sited and further protected by a moat. Earlier a ring motte had been built here, which was mentioned by Giraldus Cambrensis, but destroyed by Rhys ap Gruffudd in 1193. It had been built inside prehistoric earthworks

Today LLawhaden is little more than a pleasant village lying on the west bank of the Eastern Cleddau River, but during the 13th and 14th centuries it functioned as an important and sizeable borough under the control of the bishops of St David's.

The creation of the borough is associated with the building of the Bishop's palace on the site of the earlier motte, by Bishop Beck in the period 1280-93. The Church of St Aidan by the river, together with the early mill, were also standing at this time but no details are known of any associated settlement.

A weekly Market on Mondays and two annual fairs were granted in 1281 and a start was made on laying out the town on the level ground which runs westwards from the Castle. It seems likely that the old Church was also rebuilt at this time, while in 1287, just beyond the western limits of the borough, the Bishop founded a hospital for the poor and aged. Some remains of the building, now badly overgrown can still be seen in Chapel Field.

The first burgesses at LLawhaden appear in 1292, the number grew rapidly, and by 1326 the town housed 174 1/2 burgages held by 126, predominantly English, burgesses.

It was easily the most important of the bishopric's boroughs, even surpassing St David's, and the palace was the principal Episcopal residence, where courts were also held and felons imprisoned. While LLawhaden is now completely lacking in any urban character and the former burgage plots difficult to discern, it seems reasonable to assume that the medieval borough lay along the road leading from the Castle with its westernmost limit represented by the hospital which, since it also served as a leper house, must have been on the outskirts. In view of the large number of burgages recorded in 1326, however, which could not all have been accommodated along this stretch other areas must have been built up, and it is probable that plots also lined the now overgrown roadway which leads from the decayed Market square down to the bridge, where the remains of several dwellings are still detectable amidst the overgrowth. The settlement does not appear to have been defended, and although the Black book records the rents for buildings infra muros, these are likely to have been on the episcopal demesne lands to the south of the Castle which were enclosed with formidable stone walls, sections of which are still standing.

Almost nothing is known of the later history of LLawhaden beyond references to the Castle. During the revolt of Owain Glyndwr Henry IV ordered it to be re-fortified in case of attack, but it was eventually dismantled during the episcopacy of Bishop Barlow, 1536-47. The 16th century also witnessed the dissolution of the hospital and the borough decayed considerably with the weekly Market falling into disuse.

Most of the ruins to be seen today date from the thirteenth century. Down by the river, there is an interesting Church dating from the 1380's, and there is a ruined hospitium at the far end of the village. The Old Mill is now a trout farm and the village also has an interesting Pottery. The Castle was used as a quarry and finally given by the Church to the government and taken over by CADW.

1811 Llewhaden Fenton (Tours)

I visit Lewhaden, whose Castle constitutes the "caput baroniae" by virtue of which the bishops of St David's seat in parliament.

The village is situated on a lofty ridge above the river Cleddau, and though so high is well wooded, and has vast command of water.

Hence turning short to the right I enter the village and pass the mansion of William Skyrme, esq.. Of a most respectable family in this county, whose ancestor, an eminent attorney in the court of the marches, settled here about two centuries ago, and laid the foundation of two or three families of that name now descended from this gentleman. The village consists of a few scattered houses chiefly on the right hand, in descending towards the ruins of the magnificent and castellated episcopal palace that crowns the summit of a steep wooded Hill just above the Church having a small Valle to the north and south, with a gentle slope to each.

The Castle, though seemingly placed on the very edge almost of a precipice, was moated, and approached by a draw bridge at the grand entrance to the south, there being a considerable stream of water pouring down through the village, and now conformed in a pond in the centre of it.

The grand entrance was by a gateway of singular form, marked first by the arch to which the door or gate was hung, next by an arch more, projecting much higher, and lastly by another still more projected at the extreme height of the wall. It lies between two large bastions; that to the right has apartments in it, the uppermost of which has a stone vaulted roof and is almost entire. The windows over the gateway, and in the bastions on each side of it, have a label moulding over them. The first bastion to the right of those constituting the entrance is an octagon, as is the next, and very lofty. The first octagonal tower seemed to have been separated into two retiring apartments, which modern's might call dressing rooms, each having its water-closet, and appearing to have belonged to two bed chambers. The whole building, if we estimate its dimensions by tracing the outline of its many sided walls still up, and the compass of its moat, must have been very extensive and sumptuous, including a spacious area, in which the remains of various splendid apartments, and of the elegant Chapel, the work of Bishop Vaughan, the south side of which only having three handsome windows is still standing, the other side, as well as the east window being entirely down, with the exception to a highly finished square tower. On the east side of the area the basement story exhibits a range of fine vaulted chambers, perhaps formerly occupied by the kitchens, cellars and other offices, and entered by handsome pointed doorways cased in stone. The whole structure was of cut stone, and highly finished. Towards the north west the walls are entirely down: and on that side the ground is covered with vast detached masses in the in the wildest confusion. An ash tree of considerable size grows in the middle of the area, as do many smaller, fantastically springing from various parts of the ruins.

Though from the opposite Hill the Castle appears to stand on the very brink of a precipice, yet there is a considerable belt of grassy slope without moat, between it and the edge of the Hill. Whence you enjoy a most enchanting prospect of the windings of that noble river the Cleddau, through a luxuriant wooded scene in the Valle beneath.

Of late years much of this venerable ruin has been plundered most shamefully and unnecessarily to supply materials for repairing roads, particularly in a county abounding with "rab" and stones of various sorts fit for that purpose.; and it is to be lamented that the Bishops of St David's are not induced to prohibit such depredations on that majestic structure, from which they derive their title to sit in the house of peers. Indeed, the removal of those relics which give such dignity and picturesque effect to this and many other counties of Wales would be a serious injury, as they are irresistible magnets, attracting travellers to visit them, whereby the county cannot fail to be benefited in a high degree; and yet so little attention is paid to them, that views taken of many fifty years ago would hardly be known, so much in that time have they suffered by wanton dilapidation, more than by the mouldering consequence of age.

To this superb palace in its best days must have every appendage of luxury state and convenience, for even in Leland's time it had its forest of red deer at Llwydiarth, besides a park surrounding the Castle, to be traced by fragments of its wall still seen in several places, and of most excellent masonry, enclosing many acres of finely diversified ground. And in the list of salaries paid to the different officers belonging to the Bishop, Henry Scourfield occurs as forester of ranger of Llwydiarth and Crosswood, and keeper of the park of Llewhaden, an office no doubt of great importance and honour, being held by a gentleman of one of the most ancient houses in the county.

At what time this Castle was built is uncertain; but I am inclined to think that Thomas Beck was the principal contributor to its grandeur, as it seems to have been his most general and favoured residence, as he had purchased lands in the neighbourhood, and most of his instruments are dated from Llewhaden.

Bishop Hoton seems likewise to have had a great predilection for the place, and to have added much to the buildings, for by a deed of feoffment bearing date 1383 from Adam Hoton Bishop of St David's to John Fawley, and Elen his wife conveying certain lands to them in fee, the feoffee is styled “Constabularius castri nostri de Lewhaden et magister operum nostrorum” constable or governor of our Castle of Llewhaden, and master of our board of works; from which we may infer that this ancestor of my friend Mr Foley was skilled in architecture, and had, under that magnificent prelate, the direction and superintendence of all his vast undertakings, his repairs of the cathedral of St David's, his new College adjoining, and his improvements at his palace of Llewhaden, where this officer of distinction chiefly resided; and it is not a little remarkable that the elegant mansion of his descendant and representative of the family occupies the spot then granted to his ancestor.

Bishop Vaughan, who was a man of great spirit, taste and expense, is known to have been partial to this spot, and left, among other things, a proof of it in the beautiful Chapel he had re-edified there.

Bishop John Gilbert is said to have made it his principal residence during his prelacy and died there, as it appears by his will, dated September 8th 1403

When a barony was anciently created, the creation was always accompanied by a grant of a Castle and territory annexed, charged with military service; none were the spiritual baronies exempt from such tenure, for in the fourth year of the reign of Henry the Fourth in consequence of the alarm excited by the insurrection of Glyndwr all over Wales, but more particularly in this county, we find the royal mandate issued to Guido de Mona, then Bishop of St David's for garrisoning his Castle of Llewhaden, and putting it in a perfect state of defence to resist the enemy, on pain of forfeiting the Castle and all the manors and demesnes appurtenant.

Bishop Barlow, who thought of nothing but translation to a better see, and enriching himself “per fas et nefas” whilst he continued to wear the mitre of St David's stripped the Castle of Llewhaden and the palace of St David's of their leaden roofs as well as all his other palaces of ever thing that could be converted into immediate profit, to furnish him, by the dilapidation he himself had occasioned with a plea for removing the see to Carmarthen, or at least for contracting the episcopal establishment.

Archbishop Abbot Feb 10th 1616, granted a licence to Bishop Milbourne to demolish the Castle of Llewhaden, and also the Hall Chapel, cellar and bakehouse belonging to the palace of St David's, in short, to perfect what Barlow had begun; ; but Milbourne's translation to Carlisle prevented the execution of this (I might almost say) sacrilegious design, and Llewhaden still remains, though in ruined pride, a most picturesque object to attract the notice of every traveller of taste as it burst on his view in descending from the village of Robeston to Canaston with a superb foreground of wood and water, itself on an eminence and happily backed by the finely undulating line of the Presselly range of hills.

1839 Acc. to the Topographical Dictionary of Wales Lawhaden, or Llewhaden (Llanhauden) Lewis

Lawhaden, or Llewhaden (LLANHUAUDEN), a parish, in the union of Narberth, hundred of Dungledy, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 3½ miles (N. N. W.) from Narberth; containing 634 inhabitants. This place, which derives its name from the dedication of its Church to St. Aidan, Bishop of Lindisfarne, who died in the year 651, was for many years distinguished as the principal residence of the bishops of St Davids, who had a magnificent Castle or palace here with a very extensive park, and forest of red deer, noticed by Leland. This truly splendid structure, which was built entirely of hewn stone, was the favourite residence of Bishop Beck, who contributed greatly to its embellishment; it was adapted in every respect to the purposes of domestic convenience, and had every appendage of luxury and state. The exact time of its original foundation is not known; but from a deed of feoffment, bearing date 1383, it appears that John Fowley was at that time constable of the Castle and master of the board of works to Bishop Hoton, who conveyed to him and to Ellen his wife certain lands in the vicinity, which are now the property of his descendants. In the reign of Henry VIII., Lawhaden Castle, together with the other episcopal palaces of the diocese, was stripped of its leaden roof by Bishop Barlow, who subsequently availed himself of the dilapidation which he had caused, as a plea for carrying into effect his purpose of transferring the Bishop's seat altogether to Carmarthen. From this period the palace was suffered to fall into decay; but the ruins, which are still venerable and majestic in their appearance, afford imposing evidence of its pristine grandeur.

The parish comprises a large tract of rich arable and pasture land, which is inclosed and in a good state of cultivation. The village is situated on the summit of a lofty ridge overhanging the river Cleddy, and commanding a fine view of the adjacent country, which abounds with varied scenery. Within the parish are some highly interesting and pleasingly romantic features, among which are, the Church, beautifully situated on the margin of the river, under a richly wooded eminence; the majestic and venerable ruins of the ancient Castle immediately above it; and Ridgeway, an elegant modern mansion, erected by the late I. H. Foley, esq., and occupying a portion of the lands granted to the ancestor of that gentleman by Bishop Hoton, in the year 1383. In the village is also a good family house belonging to a descendant of the Skyrmes, whose ancestor accompanied Oliver Cromwell into the principality during the parliamentary war, and obtained a settlement at this place. Lawhaden until recently constituted a prebend in the cathedral Church of St Davids, rated in the King's Books at £17. 17. 1., and annexed to the chancellorship of the cathedral by Bishop Beck, in 1287. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Bletherston annexed, rated in the King's Books at £8. 18. 6½.; present net income, £152, with a glebe-house; patron, the Bishop of St Davids. The tithes of Lawhaden have been commuted for £315, of which a sum of £210 was payable to the chancellor of St Davids, who had also a glebe of 170 acres, worth £160 per annum, and £105 are payable to the vicar, who has a glebe of forty-five acres, valued at £50 a year. The Church, dedicated to St. Aidan, is an ancient and venerable edifice, with a handsome tower, and in its retired and beautiful situation forms an interesting and romantic feature in the scenery around the village. There are places of worship for Independents and Calvinistic Methodists; and three Sunday schools, one of them in connexion with the Church, and the others belonging to the dissenters. The remains of the ancient Castle form a majestic and venerable ruin, on the summit of a precipitous eminence, commanding a magnificent prospect. The site was originally surrounded by a moat, over which was a drawbridge leading to the principal entrance, a noble gateway defended by two circular towers; this portion of the building is still in a state of tolerable preservation. There are also the remains of two octagonal towers, which appear to have contained the state apartments and rooms of residence; of part of a small but very elegant Chapel; and some portions of the outer walls. Some fragments of the park walls are yet remaining, and the land which they now serve to enclose is some of the richest in the county. The prevailing character of the architecture is the early

English, and the ruins have a most beautiful and picturesque appearance from every point of view. On the roadside are the remains of an ancient building, covered with ivy, which is said to have been founded by Bishop Beck, as a hospitium for pilgrims visiting St Davids shrine. Lawhaden Castle was the head of the barony in right of which the Bishops of St Davids claim their seat in the house of peers.

1326 - The Bishop of St David's held a fulling mill worth 20s a year at LLawhaden
(Black Book of St David's 1326-7)

1895 LLawhaden Nooks And Corners Of Pembrokeshire Timmin's

In about another mile, our lane suddenly debouches upon the broad, triangular grass-plot, that forms the village-green of time-honoured LLawhaden. grouped around the green rise a number of old substantial homesteads — true 'homes of ancient peace' — whose low-browed lattice-windows look out upon a vastly duck-pond, over-shadowed by clumps of gnarled and weather-beaten firs.

Turning to the right at the foot of the green, we fare along the village street until it terminates abruptly in a sort of cul-de-sac, where the majestic ruins of LLawhaden Castle seem to forbid our further progress.

The great Gatehouse, with its lofty drum towers flanking the boldly-arched portcullis, indicates the noble Scale upon which the fortress was conceived. The eastern tower is still in a Fair state of preservation, retaining the strong stone floors of its successive stages, though its fellow has been shorn of more than half its bulk. These towers are pierced with small but well-proportioned lancet-windows, apparently of Edwardian date, and the corbelled battlements are carried forward above the gateway, to form a couloir for pouring down molten lead upon the foe.

On passing beneath the lofty entrance archway, we are confronted by a well-proportioned Gothic doorway, with one small pointed window, little more than a loophole, in the wall beside it ; these are the sole relics of the northern front, of which all else has fallen to decay. Near at hand rises a slender square tower, whose trefoil-headed windows and finely-worked mouldings point to a later period than that of the main structure. From its position and certain accessories, there is reason to suppose this tower contained the Chapel of the Castle, erected by Bishop Vaughan, who enlarged and beautified St David's Cathedral.

A group of flourishing ash-trees, which have sprung up where so ever they listed, cast their chequered shade athwart the neglected courtyard ; whilst pigs and poultry, from the adjacent farmstead, roam untended amidst the masses of fallen masonry, that cumber the ground in every direction.

Although perched on the brink of a steep declivity, the Castle was protected by a moat which still remains intact, though sadly choked with tangled undergrowth and debris. This moat was supplied with water from a stream, which forms the large pond at the foot of the village.

Thomas Beck, Bishop of St David's, is said to have erected LLawhaden Castle, towards the close of the thirteenth century; but it is more than probable his building merely superseded a structure of earlier date.

This worth prelate also founded, ' in his Villa de Llewhadyn, a little Hospitiim,' which he dedicated to the 'poor and needy;' devoting to its maintenance the revenues derived from his own lands. Thus Bishop Beck became the first Welsh patron of pilgrims, and supporter of the aged and infirm.

Of this very interesting foundation, all that has survived is a small building with vaulted roof, doorway, windows and a piscina, situated in a field on the outskirts of the village. This little edifice was in all probability the Chapel of Beck's hospitium. A certain Friar William was entrusted with the charge of the establishment, both he and his brethren wearing a habit distinctive of their calling.

By the time of Owen Glyndwr, the Castle appears already to have fallen into disrepair ; as we Read that the King gave orders for LLawhaden to be put into a state of defence, victualled, and furnished with a garrison.

Under the disastrous regime of Bishop Barlow, that rapacious prelate caused the lead to be stripped from off the Castle roofs, even as he had done at the beautiful old palace of St David's.

Thenceforth the stately fabric, exposed to the disintegrating forces of Nature, gradually succumbed to its misfortunes, and sank into the condition of an uninhabitable ruin.

At their Castle of LLawhaden, the Bishops of St David's lived in true baronial style; the fortress constituting the Caput Baronie, by virtue of which they were entitled to representation in the Parliament of the realm.

Descending by a steep, hollow lane to the banks of Cleddau, we linger Long about the old bridge and Castle-mill to enjoy the placid beauty of the landscape, whose rich, subdued tints are enhanced by the radiance of a mellow autumn afternoon.

Looking upstream, the Church forms the central feature of a pleasant, restful prospect ; its picturesque tower reflected in the clear waters of the Cleddau, which rushes onward to tumble with refreshing roar over a weir close at hand. Amidst the hanging woodlands which clothe the Castle Hill, we catch a glimpse of that ancient fortalice ; while the lowing of kine comes pleasantly to the ear from the deep water- meadows down the Valle .

We now bend our steps towards the parish Church, noticing a simple wooden cross beside the wicket-gate, whereon is hung a lantern to guide the footsteps of the benighted flock, during the Long, dark evenings of winter.

LLawhaden Church stands somewhat remote from the village, in a sequestered nook where the Castle Hill and the Cleddau leave scarce sufficient room for the little Church to stand : insomuch that its chancel gable well-nigh overhangs the stream. Dedicated to St. Hugo, the sacred edifice contains the mutilated effigy of an ecclesiastic, commonly supposed to represent the patron saint, but more probably intended for Adam Houghton, Bishop of St David's, and co-founder with John of Gaunt of St. Mary 's College in that ' city.'

Houghton distinguished himself by enacting a statute to regulate the Scale of wages, and the price of beer, on behalf of his faithful ' subjects ;' while tradition avers that, having been excommunicated by the Pope for some misdemeanour or other, this intrepid prelate retaliated by excommunicating the Holy Father himself!

Inside the Church we notice several curiously-sculptured corbels ; besides a two - three quaint epitaphs reciting, in rather questionable English, the virtues and graces of certain local worthies.

The semi-detached tower presents a picturesque appearance, having, attached to its southern face, a square-shaped turret which, curiously enough, looks older than the tower itself. The internal construction of this tower is somewhat peculiar, and its belfry contains a triplet of sweet-toned bells.

It is, perhaps, worthy of note that LLawhaden is supposed to derive its name from St. Aeddán, a Pembrokeshire man by birth, and a disciple of St David himself.

LLawhaden Castle

First Castle

Earlier a ring motte had been built here, which was mentioned by Giraldus Cambrensis, 1193- wooden fortification on a motte built to protect the estates of the Norman bishops of St David's by Bishop Bernard - destroyed by Lord Rhys - it had been built inside prehistoric earthworks

1898 The Castle Arch Camb

The present Castle was probably built on the site of an earlier fortress. Bishop Beck is credited with having erected the present structure, but it would appear that Bishop Adam Houghton contributed largely to its magnificence. It was one of the residences of the Prince-Bishops of St Davids, and here in 1403 died Bishop Gilbert.

Bishop Barlow (as he similarly did with the palace at St Davids) stripped the Castle of its leaden roof, and converted all the interior fittings into ready money;

1616 the Castle was further demolished by Bishop Milbourne. The Castle was garrisoned during the Civil War, but was not the scene of any important event. The red deer forest of Llwydiarth belonged to the Castle.

The principal architectural features of Lawhaden Castle are the fine entrance gateway and a rectangular projecting tower. The gateway is illustrated by Fenton, but the architecture and history of the Castle still await a competent exponent.

1909 LLawhaden Castle

By right of the Barony of LLawhaden, the Bishop of St Davids holds a seat in Parliament, and it was said that the prelate was " a baron at LLawhaden, a Bishop at St Davids, and a gentleman at Lamphey."

The Castle stands on the summit of a wooded steep overlooking the River Cleddau, which winds below under a quaint old bridge with recessed refuges.

An imposing gateway, doubly arched, and unusually high, flanked by a tower on either side, gives entrance to the Castle; other interesting features are an octagonal tower, some charming little trefoil-headed windows and arched doorways of Decorated Gothic style.

The building is surrounded by a deep moat, beyond which a considerable area was enclosed. Leland (1538 1544) speaks of an extensive deer forest also belonging to the barony.

Although proof is lacking, Bishop Beck (1287), whose ruined hospitium still stand at LLawhaden, is generally thought to have been founder of the Castle; Bishop Adam Hoton enlarged and beautified it in 1383.

In 1402 King Henry IV. issued a royal mandate to the then Bishop of St Davids for garrisoning his Castle of LLawhaden and putting it in a state of defence to resist the raids of Owain Glyndwr.

About 1503 Bishop John Morgan imprisoned at LLawhaden a lady named Tanglost, whose wicked career he had condemned, and who had continued in wrong-doing despite his expostulations. Her friend, Thomas Wryriott of Orielton, at the head of a troop of horse, stormed the Bishop's Castle and carried off the lady. Tanglost persisted in her bad ways, and again the Bishop, desirous of peace and good conduct, immured her at LLawhaden. Thomas Wryriott begged for the episcopal absolution, which was granted on condition that he should amend; Tanglost was banished from the diocese. Determining revenge, she proceeded to Bristol, where she hired a witch to cast a spell upon Morgan; the plotters made waxen images and stuck them with pins, so frightening the good man that he applied to the Mayor and Corporation of Bristol to help him to convict the woman, who, alarmed, in her turn, denied the witchcraft and promised reform.

According to Leland, Bishop Vaughan, 1509 1522, rebuilt and enriched the Chapel of LLawhaden Castle and generally repaired the whole structure, but that plundering prelate, Bishop Barlow, during his episcopacy (1530 to 1548), stripped off the leaden roofs. In 1616 Archbishop Abbot granted a licence to Bishop Milbourne to demolish the building altogether, but before he could accomplish his design he was fortunately translated to the See of Carlisle, and the licence was revoked.

In later years the neglected ruin became a mere stone quarry to supply material for road mending.

LLawhaden Castle is now rented by the Pembrokeshire Society for the Preservation of Ancient Buildings, from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, who acquired it in 1837. This local society has already done much to preserve so interesting a relic.

1923 RCAM

This interesting baronial residence of the bishops of St David's was built in the period 1250-1300, probably during the episcopate of Thomas Beck (1280-93.) The site was well chosen for the erection of a small marcher Castle, it being the highest point of the wild and diversified district which lies between the upper reaches of Milford Haven and the line of the Prescelly hills. The Castle dominated the lower heights of the district, and its walls commanded a wide prospect over the broken country around, whilst the rapid and dangerous waters of the Eastern Cleddau, flowed at the foot of the Hill upon which the Castle is placed, effectively protecting the stronghold from sudden attack from the east and south. The country to the north and west, although affording abundant shelter to an enemy approaching from those directions, at the same time confronted him with almost insuperable difficulties in working his way through the labyrinth of valleys .

The strongholds of the Welsh marcher lords usually consisted of a square, slightly oblong, or irregular sided structure, according to the requirements of the situation. Strong towers, generally round, but occasionally right angled or pentagonal in shape, were placed at the corners, and other subordinate towers occupied intermediate points on the line of the walls, if the curtains called for further defences. The entrance into the Castle courtyard was usually between two towers placed in one of the sides, its exact position in the curtain being governed by the general convenience of ingress and egress.

The Castle of Carew is possibly of slightly earlier date than that of Lawhaden, and those of Kidwelly and Carmarthen may be a few years earlier still; but in its main outlines Lawhaden is similar in plan to each of these structures, and each may have served as a pattern for one detail or another in the type of defensive stronghold which had been found to be most effective in the constantly disturbed districts of South Wales.

At Lawhaden the only portions of the 13th century Castle still remaining are the two gateway towers, the south curtain wall with its west and east towers and a short length of curtain between the westernmost of the two south curtain towers and the inward projection of the east gateway tower. The last mentioned short length of walling is not aligned with the south curtain, but swerved to meet the east gateway tower at a direct right angle; it therefore made the entire structure one of five instead of four sides. Of the west gateway tower only the exterior curved projection remains; but as the whole of the western side of the Castle has completely disappeared, it is impossible without excavation to decide how the west curtain was connected with the west gateway tower. The line of the moat however, comes so closely up to the tower that it would appear the west curtain must have started directly from the gateway tower, and that the latter constituted not only part of the entrance defences, but also formed part of the south western angle tower of the Castle. The arrangement is similar to that of the entrance towers at Carew but there the curtain is continued for a few yards beyond the lower gateway tower before it takes the right angled turn that carries it along the west front, whilst at Lawhaden the exterior wall of the gateway tower appears to have been continued as part of the entire west front.

The north front also has entirely disappeared, and the numerous mounds of earth give only general indications of the direction taken by the curtain on this side. A tower was doubtless placed at the north east angle, but of its character nothing can be said. The east curtain wall was carried to meet the south eastern tower, this tower being a hexagon, while its companion tower at the south western angle was five sided. There are no traces of a barbican.

The principal interior buildings of the 13th century Castle appear to have been placed against the south wall, between the east gateway tower and the south east angle tower, and, as Carew shows a similar plan we may safely conclude that the rooms communicated directly with the east gateway chambers. The Hall was placed between the gateway tower and the south west curtain tower; and beyond occupying the greater part of the south curtain wall was the Chapel. The line of the interior (or north) wall of the Chapel can be traced, but the east wall, as well as the roof and floors of the different storeys have fallen. In the south eastern tower can be seen certain chambers and staircase openings which were probably devoted to the Clergy serving the Chapel, all exhibiting beautiful work of the Early English period.

About three quarters of a century later, probably during the episcopate of Bishop Houghton (1361-89) the period between the Black Death and the rising of Owen Glyndwr, when Wales was at rest from political troubles, great alterations were carried out at Lawhaden. Bishop Gower (died 1347) had erected a magnificent palace at Lamphey, the latter not more than ten miles distant from LLawhaden. The last was difficult to access, and inconvenient as a dwelling place, and it is possible that the whole place had fallen into disrepair if not disrepute. Times had altered; the military Castle had become unnecessary, almost obsolete, and the registers of the see show that much of the business of the diocese was being transacted at Lamphey. Changes were determined upon. We do not know whether it was resolved to throw open the small and cramped courtyard to fresh air and sun by destroying the north and west walls, but the completeness of their removal seems to warrant the conjecture. At all events whatever buildings may have stood against the east wall were taken down, a fresh range was erected outside the earlier limits, the original curtain became the interior wall of a Long line of buildings that extended from the north east tower to about two thirds of the length of the curtain, and the exterior wall was carried out to the margin of the moat. This part of the Castle is so densely covered with shrubs and brambles that, though much of the principal walls are standing in fair preservation, it is impossible to appreciate the purpose of the details which are visible. The new buildings were placed between the projections of two square or oblong towers which may have belonged to the original Castle though there are slight evidences of work of a later date. These comprise a fine chamber which measured about 60ft long by 18ft deep. There was a staircase in each of the corner towers, denoting that the entire range was floored, but the upper structure has been destroyed. There were two doors from the principal chamber to rooms at either end, and a row of windows on the ground floor looked into the courtyard.

At a still later period a graceful square tower giving direct access to the Chapel was built, probably during the episcopate of Bishop Vaughan (1509-22), the builder of the Chapel at St David's which goes by his name. The Lawhaden tower is a charming example of late Perpendicular and worthy of careful restoration. The access to the Chapel had possibly been, as at Carew through the Hall and the only entrance to the Hall may have been through the west gateway tower.

A deep moat which surrounds the entire structure, is still in much of its pristine condition, except in front of the gateway where it has been slightly altered. There are no present indications of any outer defences.

The current belief that the Castle was dismantled by Bishop Barlow (1536-1547) is probably correct --- visited 29th September 1923.

LLawhaden Castle - Cadw

Gerald of Wales visited his uncle, Bishop David Fitz Gerald at LLawhaden about 1175, he described it as a Castle. It was already a site of great importance to the bishops of St David's, and lay at the centre of some of their richest estates. Standing on a commanding spur above the Eastern Cleddau, in finely wooded country, the great oval ditch survives from the early stronghold visited by Gerald. In 1192, however, the defences were largely destroyed during a Welsh uprising. Following its recovery by the bishops, LLawhaden may have been rebuilt in stone during the 13th century, but it was not until the beginning of the 14th century that the Castle was reconstructed on its present lines. As such, the former stronghold was transformed into an impressive fortified mansion, designed to provide the residence of a wealthy prelate, quarters for a permanent garrison and lodging for important guests.

The bishops of St David's owned extensive estates in south-west Wales and their lands in the LLawhaden area were particularly rich. Such important estates required protection, and LLawhaden Castle was built in the early 12th century for that purpose. The form of the earliest Castle, a ring work of earth and timber, may still be seen in the existing circular bank and ditch which would have protected the interior timber buildings of the Bishop's residence. The bank has been reduced and later stone buildings placed on top of it, but its plan is still clear. Originally, the Castle would have been entered by a wooden gate and the bank was probably surmounted by a wooden palisade. Such was the Castle that Giraldus Cambrensis saw when he visited his uncle, Bishop David Fitz Gerald, here in 1175. But the defensive capabilities of such castles were inevitably limited, and in 1192 the Lord Rhys, prince of Deheubarth, captured and destroyed the Castle. The earliest stone buildings probably date to the early 13th century when the bishops recovered LLawhaden; the foundations of the circular tower on the south-west, and the semi-circular tower on the north-west, still survive to demonstrate the strength of these new defences.

In the late 13th and early 14th century the Castle was transformed into a great fortified mansion, more appropriate as the residence of men of the standing of the bishops of St David's. It was now equipped both with quarters for a permanent garrison and with comfortable lodgings for important guests or the Bishop's entourage. Earlier buildings and defences were dramatically altered or removed altogether - although the circular shape of the ring-work still remained, the bank became a base for large new residential buildings arranged around a central court. This work was probably carried out by Bishop Thomas Beck (1293-1328). After this, there were further building phases in the later 14th century when the imposing extension to the gatehouse and the Chapel tower were built, and the early 16th century when the south range was remodelled and the Chapel porch added. Tradition records that the Castle was dismantled by Bishop Barlow in the mid-16th century, when the bishops moved their chief residence to Abergwili near Carmarthen. The outer part of the twin-towered gatehouse stands to parapet level, almost the full 14th century height. The entrance is probably the most impressive part of the Castle - the banded effect of the blue stone used in the masonry, the semicircular flanking towers with their heavy spurred bases and arrow slits, and the murder holes above the drawbridge combine to make the approach to the Castle memorable. Behind the façade, much of the gatehouse has fallen, but the passage still retains the slots for the portcullis, and the basements of the guardrooms may be seen on either side. Originally, a large Hall ran over the passage at first-floor level, and was probably used as the residence of the constable of the Castle.

Across the courtyard opposite the gatehouse, was the Hall. The principal rooms were on the first floor, approached by an external stair from the courtyard; they lay above vaulted ground-floor store-rooms. Two wings were attached to the Hall. That on the east housed the Bishop's private apartments on the first floor, while on the west was a kitchen; a bakehouse, which was built later, lies adjacent. On the east of the inner ward are the remains of the Chapel, much of which has now fallen. The entrance was by a first floor doorway fronted by a slender porch and stair which still stands. The outer doorway is decorated with a crowned male head and a female head with a wimple head-dress. The small, isolated rooms in the porch above the access to the Chapel probably housed the exchequer, or finance officer, of the Bishop. On either side of the main gatehouse are large rooms over vaulted basements. The eastern rooms are on two floors and probably served as the well- equipped apartments of important guests of the Bishop; each set had a sizeable room with a fireplace, and a small bedroom with a lavatory housed in the south-west polygonal tower. The large room on the west may have been to accommodate the small garrison of armed retainers, kept at the Castle by the bishops for their defence.

The later Castle defences consist of the eastern and southern polygonal towers which gave a formidable appearance to the Castle exterior, but in reality were less for serious defence than to provide service areas and latrines for the apartment blocks within a military-style façade. Each tower has a vaulted ground floor, which presumably functioned as the Castle's prison. From the octagonal apartment rooms on the first and second floors of this tower the views of the Castle courtyard are particularly fine.

Llawaden Castle

Llawaden Castle was originally an earth-and-timber ring-work, built circa 1115 on the frontier between Welsh and Norman/Flemish occupied regions, but was razed to the ground in 1193, and it was not until the Normans began to gain control in the region in the early thirteenth century that the site was refortified with a masonry curtain and several towers.

Bishop Beck (1280-93), seeking to develop the See of St David's, created the borough of Llawaden and invested heavily in the region, building a hospital in 1287. There is no evidence of work being carried out on the Castle, however, until the episcopate of Adam de Houghton (1362-89). It is to this period that the majority of the visible remains date. Llawaden Castle was abandoned as a residence in the fifteenth century, but remained in administrative use, acting as a bishops prison, until the Reformation, following which it rapidly fell into decay.

The dried moat encircles an oval area roughly 55m across, upon which can be seen the ruins of a twin-towered gatehouse, a winged building which contained the great Hall kitchens and bishops' chamber, residential apartments, Chapel and lodgings. The remains of two polygonal towers are well preserved, and the base of the original thirteenth century round tower is still in evidence.

Hospitium

Near the Castle "is a little building, all that remains of a hospitium erected by Bishop Beck", Arch Camb 1898

Foundation charter 1287 of Bishop Beck's hospitium British Museum

1287 November

I [Bishop Thomas Beck] ordain and enact that in the town of LLawhaden, at a place specially appointed by me for the purpose where I have erected an oratory, shall be built a hospital in which pilgrims, orphan paupers, infirm, old and feeble persons and imbecile strangers, and wearied travellers may be entertained.

G Hartwell Jones "Celtic Britain and the Pilgrim Movement" Y Cymmrodor, Vol XXIII, 1912 p.450.

1811 Fenton, Tours

A little to the left on entering the village , in a meadow, are the remains of the hospitium built and endowed by Thomas Beke, Bishop of St David's consisting of a detached building with pointed arch roof, which stripped of its external covering of tiles as it probably has been for centuries, yet shows no symptoms of decay within, and is without clad with small trees and shrubs which flourish on its summit, growing through its matted ivy and producing a most picturesque effect. Here the pious founder had first built an oratory, which he soon enlarged into a hospitium appointing friar William, with a particular habit assigned him and his brethren, to be prior and master of the same, and annexed to it lands of his own purchase(viz.) "Cotlande. Lands in Kivayn and near adjoining, besides the advowson of the Church of Kevyn, and four acres of land of Llewhaden given to the see other lands in lieu thereof ".

This was in the year 1287; this small portion of that monastic establishment I apprehend to be the refractory of dormitory of the hospitium itself, though there are some , from its lying nearly east and west, will have it to be the Chapel, especially as on the south side there is a piscina; but there are instances of such niches for holy water in other places devoted to pious uses besides churches; and if it had been a Chapel, there would have been, I presume, a window at the east end where there is a door. It is lighted by two side windows and has another entrance on the north side facing the road, and as it were, inviting the way-worn pilgrims, the benighted stranger, the unsheltered orphan, or other objects of the pious founder's consideration; so that I conceive the door at the east end might have connected with a small cloister leading to the prior's apartments.

Hospital Of St Mary The Virgin, St Thomas The Martyr & Edward The King, LLawhaden

The hospital of St Mary the Virgin, SS Thomas the Martyr & Edward the King was founded in 1287 in the Bishop of St David's borough of LLawhaden. Its charter recommends the care of pilgrims, paupers, aged persons and imbeciles. The hospital was dissolved in the earlier sixteenth century. The remains consist of a single vaulted building set within a rectangular ditched enclosure at least 50m square. The building is about 9.0m by 7.0m and is built of uncoursed rubble from which the finer stone dressings have been robbed. A piscina within suggests that this was a Chapel, although other identifications have been put forward. Foundations of an earlier building have been excavated.

1811 Parish Church Llewhaden Fenton

Under the richly wooded precipitous steep on which the Castle stands is the parish Church of Llewhaden, in a narrow Valle, shut in with woods, and placed on the margin of the River Cleddau, which here begins to assume a dignified appearance, wide, deep, and yet clear, as if conscious of its approach to the majestic tide of Milford which insinuates itself almost thus far to meet it. And here, on looking up the river towards the Church, the bridge, the mill, the mansion of Talybont, and other pleasing features, most happily united to form a beautiful landscape.

The Church more from its situation as forming an ingredient in this charming view than from anything in its form, dimensions or architecture that it can boast of to recommend it becomes an object of notice. To raise it above the level of the ordinary churches it has inseparable badge of those found in the Englishery of this county, a tower to give an air of dignity to its exterior, a building of after growth and springing from a more ancient one; and within, to excite the attention of the antiquary, only one solitary old monument, under a plain canopy, bearing the recumbent effigy of a priest, well executed in Norton stone, though now shamefully blunted with whitewash, like all his sculptured fraternity, and said to be that of St Hugo, to whom the Church is dedicated. It occupies a small aisle to the south of the chancel, and separated from it by two very singular arches resting on a plain round pillar. In the chancel there is a small tablet of freestone, to commemorate a former chancellor of St David's of the ancient house of Henlly.

There is a large tomb railed in just without the chancel, thus inscribed :- Underneath and round this place lie the family of the Hawkwells.

The Church is a vicarage, the rectorial tithes formerly belonged to the prebend of Llewhaden, together with the demesne of St Kenox, having been annexed to the chancellorship by Bishop Beke, which are now held under lease from that dignitary by J Herbert Foley esq.. Of Ridgeway.

The Church of St Aidan

1193 The Church of St Aidan by the river, together with the early mill, were standing at this time but no details are known of any associated settlement

The Church which stands on the banks of the Eastern Cleddau, is dedicated to St Aidan of Ferns, and the Castle built by the Bishop's of St David's is entered from the village. A hospice for the use of wayfarers was built by Bishop Beck in 1287, but only a vaulted stone chamber remains.

Lawhaden Church. Arch Camb 1898

— The Church of LLawhaden is one of the most picturesquely situated religious edifices in the county. The double tower, to which the Rev. Mr. Williams, the Vicar, drew attention in a brief paper he Read, is unique, although of the military type usually found in the county. Mr. Williams was of opinion that the original Church had the smaller tower. In order to save the expense of building a new staircase in what appeared to be the later tower, that of the original tower was made to serve its purpose as far as it went, and the newer tower was built over the older one. In the arch under the tower was shown the tomb of one of the Owens of Henllys, chaplain to Charles II ; and a monument between the two arches in the chancel was shown as that of William Evans, Vicar of LLawhaden, the translator of Vicar Prichard's "Canwyll y Cymru". In the Chapel of St. Hugh was the recumbent effigy of a priest, evidently a person of some repute. In the chancel was a small recess which may have been used as an aumbry. Outside the Church, built into the east wall of the chancel, and standing upright on a base, is a pre-Norman cross, which, it would appear, occupies its original position, and existed here before the erection of the Church. The Vicar showed a very old register, dating from the days of the Commonwealth, from which he found that Wiston, Bletherston and LLawhaden parishes were consolidated, and that although the banns of marriage were published in Church, the ceremony of marriage was performed either at Narberth Castle or Picton Castle before a civil magistrate.

The Parish Church

The Church comprises chancel 33 ½ ft by 18 ½ ft, south aisle to chancel 22ft by 15ft, nave 58 ½ ft by 24ft porch to west gable (modern) tower on the south side. There was, however, and earlier Church which, prior to its complete removal, lay partly within and partly without the south wall of the later building. This earlier Church (like the later) had a tower on its south side, which was permitted to remain when the nave was removed. The chancel of the earlier Church was also retained. The site of the new Church is a few yards to the north of the older building, so that when the nave and walls of the latter were taken down, probably in the late 14th century, a space intervened between the north wall of the earlier tower and the south wall of the new nave, into which the new tower was fitted. Thus the north wall of the old tower became the south wall of the new. A rough archway was opened between the two towers, and the earlier stairway continued to do duty to its full height, beyond which an ingeniously effective turn carried it through a narrow opening into the tower, where it continued its course to the battlements. The earlier chancel became an aisle or Chapel to the new chancel; the intervening wall between the new chancel and the old was cut through, and two depressed arches springing from a circular masonry pier, transformed the earlier chancel into an aisle to the later.

The plan by which the earlier chancel and tower were incorporated into the new structure is highly ingenious, and the Church affords an interesting example of the manner in which the problems of enlargement and reconstruction were met at a time when medieval architecture was at its zenith.

In an recess in the chancel aisle is the much abraded figure of a priest, probably of the late 13th century.

The font is of the square Norman type.

An early stone cross, perhaps a dedication stone has been built into the exterior east wall —visited 23rd September 1923.

1994

A large new nave and chancel were added in the 14th century under patronage of the Bishops of St David's. In 1862 the nave was mostly rebuilt. the south doorway being blocked and a west porch added. The original 13th century chancel was retained as a south Chapel and the original south tower with a stair turret on the west side survives on the south side of the huge lofty new tower raised between it and the new nave. The effigy of a priest lies in a recess in the south Chapel, and there is a Norman font.

In the village is a lofty vaulted Chapel which served a hospital founded by Bishop Beck in 1287. The Chapel was dedicated to St Mary , St Thomas and St Edmund. (The Old Parish Churches of South West Wales by Mike Salter 1994.)

In 1287 the prebend of LLawhaden (in other words the rectory of Llawaden), was granted in perpetuity by Bishop Thomas Beck to the chancellor of St David's Cathedral, but the right of presentation to the vicarage appears to have been retained by the Bishop.

So far as can be ascertained, the Chapel of Bletherston has been annexed to the vicarage of LLawhaden from the earliest times, and is still united to that living.

There is some question as to the saint to which this Church is dedicated. Fenton in his Tour of Pembrokeshire 1811 states that it was dedicated to St. Hugo, apparently basing this view on a grant in 1334 (contained in the Statutes of St David's Cathedral) by John Gom, who conveyed certain property to the Precentor and Chapter of St David's, subject to certain yearly charges, one of which was the payment of 5 marks to a chaplain to celebrate Mass in the Church of St. Hugo, of Lawadeyn. It is, however, much more likely that the Church was dedicated to St. Aidan. The name Llairhaden undoubtedly suggests this. It is possible that Hugh and Aidan maybe synonymous names, as Sir John Rhys says that the Old Irish Oedt, later Haodh was anglicised into 'Hugh.' Another suggestion is that the Church of St. Hugo may have been a chantry in the Church of LLawhaden, or possibly the Chapel in LLawhaden Castle.

1291 Under the name, 'Ecclesia Lanwraden, this Church was in 1291 assessed at £17 6s. 8d., the tenths payable thereon to the King being £1 14s. 8d. - (Taxatio.)

On 13 Jan., 1873 a faculty was granted for the removal of the body of Mrs. Mary Anne Jones from LLawhaden churchyard to the churchyard of the parish of Llanedy, Carmes.

In addition to the Free Chapel of St. Mary, LLawhaden, there is said to have been a Chapel dedicated to St. Cadoc in the parish. - (Lives of British Saints, Pt. 2, p. 119.)

The rectors of LLawhaden were the chancellors of St David's Cathedral;

Pembrokeshire Church Plate Evans J T 1869 Llawhadden

(S. Aidan). —An Elizabethan Chalice bearing the maker's Mark only. The bowl is of the form of an inverted truncated cone. It has the customary two bands of decorated strap-work, the upper one enclosing the usual woodbine foliage, a ray of which is carried above and below each of the three intersecting points, whilst within the lower band is the inscription "* POCVLVM » ECLESYE • DE » LANYEHADEN ". Under the bowl and also where the stem joins the base is a band of vertical reed moulding. Dividing the stem is a small narrow knob ornamented with intermittent lines. The Paten cover has disappeared. The dimensions of the Chalice are as follows:— height, 6in.; diam. of bowl, 3in.; depth, 3in.; diam. of base, 3in.; weight, 7 oz.

A Plate used as a Credence Paten, bearing the Hall Mark of the Britannia standard for 1713, the maker's Mark not being discoverable. Beneath is roughly scratched " David Phillips". Diam., 8 in.; weight, 8 oz. 5 dwts. In the centre is a coat of arms. The coat is that of the Meares family, but on it is an escutcheon of pretence, the identification of which is not very dear. The donor was probably William Meares, son of George Meares, who was Sheriff of Pembrokeshire in 1693. William married Elizabeth, one of the co-heirs of Griffith Hawkwell of Talybont, LLawhaden, and acquired by his marriage Talybont and other property at LLawhaden. He would therefore be entitled to put her arms (Hawkwell) on a shield of pretence. This appears to be the most likely interpretation of the coat. The Meares family who sold their LLawhaden property to the Skyrmes, hailed from Ireland, and for centuries occupied an important position in Pembrokeshire, several of them serving as Sheriff of the county from 1673-1833. Their chief place of residence was Eastington, formerly Jestynton, which latter is said to have got its name from Jestyn, also said to be a member of the Welsh royal family.

A Service of plated metal consisting of a Chalice, 8 in. high; an ewer-shaped Flagon, 11 in. high; and a Paten, 8 in. in diameter.

Mrs Bevan's School

On the 7th of December I visited the above school. It was held in a small cottage built on the glebe land given by the Vicar for the purpose rent free. The school had been in the parish for 15 months. The vicar had got a very substantial school room in building, and nearly ready, towards the Committee of Council had made him a grant of £37 10s. The new school room would be ready after the Christmas holidays. The number some time ago had been nearly 100 attending the present school. The school was then held in the parish Church, the room being far too small to accommodate them.

I found the room in which they had retired insufferable close The desks and benches were insufficient . The furniture consisted of one small square table for the master, and one desk about 10ft Long for the pupils together with six or eight low benches. Light was admitted by two small glazed windows. There was a fireplace in the room but no fire. The floor was a composition of earth and lime. The door was in a pretty good state of repair. I heard the Bible class Read to the master the first chapter of the book of Proverbs; eleven of the number Read pretty correctly. The next class I heard was the Testament class. Three Read pretty well; the others Read very badly. I could hardly get any answers from this class to the simplest questions. The answers in the multiplication and addition tables from the boys in the senior class were good. The remaining part of of the school were, some of them, reading Vyse's Spelling Book and reading Made Easy and others were learning letters and monosyllables. The Vicar told me that attendance on this charity school, since it had been in the parish, by labourers children was remarkably good. Wages were from 6d to 8d with food or from 1s to 1s 4d on their own finding. They were all very sober. Labourers in general were very poor. In the Sunday school is used a printed sheet, containing the several clauses of the Apostles Creed, with three scriptural text in proof of each – something in the nature of the Pwncau.

Roman Llawhadden

In the late 1990's I was present at a meeting when there was discussion about some aerial photographs which appeared to show a Roman road running from Carmarthen to Whitland and then on to LLawhaden presumably from there to the ford at Haverfordwest. These photographs were shown at a meeting of the Pembrokeshire Historical Society in the Library Haverfordwest. Since then there has been further research on the subject which would seem to prove the evidence given is correct.

Linear Earthwork Feature Extending From Broadway Enclosure

A linear bank, extending c.500m from Broadway enclosure, running north-north-west, north, north-north-east, north-east & then eastwards, from SN07051844 to SN07211880. The feature has been observed to cut across Broadway enclosure, extending its course by about 60m, perhaps indicating that it is later in date than the enclosure (see Mytum & Williams 1998 (LLawhaden, BAR 275), 6), whilst on the N it appears to conform to the line of an east-west Roman road; current boundary features may continue the line of the bank to a watercourse to the east.

Roman road west Of Carmarthen; Via Julia, Pen-Y-Groes Section

Intermittent parchmarks represent a roughly 830m stretch of a Roman road, part of the route running west from Carmarthen. The course of this stretch of road is rather sinuous, as it negotiates the head of a tributary valley leading west into the Cleddaurou. Quarry pits are apparent in the eastern area. Next section recorded to the east some 620m distant. Next section to the west some 800m distant.

Roman road west Of Carmarthen; Via Julia, Fairy Bank Section

A roughly 75m east-west stretch of Roman road, part of the route leading west from Carmarthen.

The next recorded section to the west is some 620m distant, and the next recorded section to the east is some 800m distant.

Roman road west Of Carmarthen; Via Julia west of Drim

Linear cropmark west of Drim. ?Via Julia RCAHMW . Does not conform to currently accepted route of Roman road W of Carmarthen . J.Wiles 03.08.04

Drim Camp is a descheduled hillfort, 400 yards to the south-east of Drim Castle. The hillfort is a banked and ditched oval enclosure, about 30m north-west to south-east by 25m, having a north-west facing entrance, set on the western end of a east-west ridge summit.

Near total excavation produced evidence for later prehistoric and Roman period occupation, centring on a single circular structure; pre-enclosure activity, including cultivation marks, was attested, whilst a cremation deposit was not closely dated: a distinct later, or post-medieval occupation period, involving rectangular structures, is indicated.

Cotland Mill (South)

Soilmark of enclosure approx. 120m square with one rounded corner visible. Remaining extents of enclosure obscured by field boundaries. An outside possibility that this is Roman in date. Possibly old ploughed out field boundary. Discovered during RCAHMW aerial reconnaissance on 10th April 2003. Photography of site as cropmark on 18th July 2003 showed well marked, close-set double ditches along the north side which matched the position of the soilmarked 'rampart'. This appears to lend greater weight to the site being Roman. T Driver RCAHMW

Dan-Y-Coed, Enclosure

The oval, banked and ditched enclosure at Dan-y-Coed measures about 42m east-west by 30m, and has a south-west facing entrance fronted by a roughly 40m ditched approachway, whose ditches appear to define dependant enclosures, intersecting with those of the Woodside enclosure, set about 60m to the north

Near total excavation demonstrated an extended occupation sequence, involving circular and four-post structures, dated from radio-carbon and material assemblage to the 2nd century BC through to the 2nd century AD, with later, rectangular structures possibly belonging to the Roman period.

Bodringallt Enclosure

The oval, ditched and ramparted enclosure at Bodringallt measures about 58m east-west by 40m, and is set on ground falling to the south, having a south-west facing entrance, on the north side of which springs a ditch defining a roughly 150m east-west by 50m enclosure on the north.

Survey and limited excavation, in c.1980 produced a limited later 1st to early 2nd century Romano-British assemblage, with radio-carbon dates indicating occupation in the 1st-2nd century BC.

Roman road west Of Carmarthen; Via Julia, Broadway Section

Discontinuous cropmarks thought to represent a Roman road, are part of a route west of Carmarthen, extending about 360m rather south of east-west, including linear features and quarry pits, from SN07171879 to SN06821878. An apparent branch heading south-west probably represents part of a later linear bank

Parchmark of a roughly 100m section of Roman road, part of route west of Carmarthen. This section runs east-west, descending a spur into the valley of the western Cleddau.

Several quarry pits, possibly associated, are also apparent. Next recorded section to the east, some 800m distant.

Next recorded section to the west-north-west, some 1.25km distant, on the far side of the Cleddau.

1811 Talybont Fenton (Tours)

The mansion of Talybont, almost facing the Church on the opposite bank of the river, now belongs to John Meares esq.. was first built and inhabited by a family of the name of Hawkwell who being in some employ under Bishop Barlow and his confidential instrument during his rapacious prelacy, became possessed of much property in this country, the reward of faithful attachment to his Rev. master, who settled him first at St Kenox for the convenience of superintending the work of destruction then carried on at Llewhaden.

Dinglestopple Tumulus

This mound is situated on low ground in the north corner of a field belonging to Dingstopple Farm. It has a base circumference of 120 ft height of 8ft., and a summit diameter of 35 ft. It has been dug into from the summit, where there is a cavity of some 3ft in depth. A few aged trees grow upon it visited April 1920

St Kenox Tumulus.

At a distance of some 350 yds south west of St Kenox farmhouse stood what was probably a very fine tumulus. Except for some fragments of its base it has been entirely removed, and its site dug into as a quarry. Its circumference was about 135ft –visited 15th May 1920.

Drum Camp The remains of a small circular enclosure on Broadway Farm. When perfect it may have had a diameter of 80ft, but at least two-thirds of the bank has been levelled. The remaining portion has a height of 6ft with a fall of 8ft to the surrounding level. Any ditch which may have existed has been filled in –visited 23rd April 1920

Drum Castle

This earthwork stands immediately north of Drum homestead, around which are remains of old buildings, intermixed with modern cottages and barns approached by ancient sunk track ways and narrow lanes. It consists of a circular mound 150ft in diameter surrounded by a 5ft bank and ditch. The ditch is 60ft from the crest of the rampart to the edge of the counter scarp. The entrance, which is to the north was approached by an earthen causeway 20ft wide – visited 23rd April 1920

Drum Wood Camp

On the western side of Drum wood, on ground which slopes to the south, is an oval enclosure 140ft by 120ft The bank on the western side, where it forms the hedge, has a height of some 5ft. The remaining portion has almost disappeared under cultivation. There may have been an outer bank on the northern side. The entrance was in the part of the bank that has been cleared away – visited 17th May 1920.

Drum Wood Camp (2)

An earthwork about 1 ½ miles south of the other enclosure. It has been formed by cutting off the end of a small spur, and is defended by a steep slope to the south, and to a lesser degree to the north west. On the rising ground to the north west is a massive and well preserved rampart 8ft high with a fall of 9ft to a ditch which is 10ft wide. A second rampart 4ft higher than the first falls 9ft to a ditch 7ft deep. The ground immediately in front of the camp is 10ft higher than the interior. The length of the enclosed area is about 300ft and its greatest width 200ft. The entrance, which has been disturbed, is at the south western end of the rampart. The earthwork is much overgrown – RCAM 21st April 1920.

Pilcornswell Camps

(1) Of this earthwork on Pilcornswell Farm but faint traces remain of a bank and ditch, both much bowed out to the east across a tongue of land. The whole work is practically destroyed; but it may be conjectured that the entrance faced north – visited 21st April 1920

(2) In the field next north to that on which the first camp is placed are faint traces of a circular enclosure to which attention has been drawn by the Pembrokeshire Archaeological Survey. It was at that time much reduced by agricultural operations, and has since been still further obliterated. It has a diameter of 300ft, and is now bisected by a hedge. The entrance was probably to the east – RCAM 21 April 1920.

Pilcornswell, Enclosure

The oval enclosure at Pilcornswell measures about 65m north-west to south-east by 80m. It rests on steep natural slopes on the north-west and south-west, elsewhere defined by a bank, ditch and counterscarp, having a north-east facing entrance, elaborated by a curvilinear banked area, about 20m deep. A limited excavation yielded 5th-2nd century radio-carbon dates, which were tied to an episode of rampart destruction; the site produced an unstratified Romano-British glass sherd.

Gelli Camp

This is a circular work, situated on the hillside on the south bank of the river Syfynwy, and commanded by higher ground to the south and west. The diameter from north to south is 130ft and from east to west 120 ft. the ground rises to the west, where the bank is 2ft high with a fall of 4ft to a shallow ditch. The entrance was to the south. This work could have served no military purpose; it may have been a cattle enclosure.-- visited 19th April 1920

Gelli Camp is an oval or subrectangular enclosure, about 42m north-south by 36m, defined by a bank and ditch, set upon the north-east tip of a slight ridge, having a north-west facing entrance. A second, possible, enclosure, largely denuded, lies about 40m to the south-west

A possible counterscarp is apparent on the south; a ditched/banked approach leads at least 64m to the north-west, where it is obscured by the railway.

Vaynor Gaer

A large ovoid enclosure with a length of 280ft and a maximum width of 165 ft. The defence consists of a double bank and ditch, both much altered. The bank has an average height of 2ft with a 6 to 7 ft fall to the ditch. The entrance, which was at the north east end of the oval has been destroyed. When examined about the year 1870, it was noticed that at the north east corner "the outer bank diverges from the line of the main enclosure and projects outward about 30ft, the ditch between the two being replaced by a terrace" Although the earthwork is on a slope, it is well above the steep side of the Hill. The field close to the south west end of the earthwork, on which a quarry is being worked is known as Y Gaer – visited 14th April 1920

Faenor Gaer, LLawhaden RCAHMW

The earthworks of an oval enclosure at Faenor Gaer, LLawhaden, are defined by generally concentric banked and ditched circuits, about 95m and 126m north-east to south-west by 65m and 100m respectively. It is set on the butt of a south facing ridge, or spur, having a north-east facing entrance. Indications of occupation have been observed in the interior, where 'burnt earth and daub' were observed after ploughing in 1960.

St Kenox RCAM

A farmhouse set among ancient trees on the west bank of the Eastern Cleddau. The present building though of no antiquarian interest stands on the site of one formerly known as the Chancellor's house, where lived the Rev Rhys Pritchard author of "Canwyll Cymry" when chancellor of St David's (1620), the house being annexed to that dignity. It is said (Eminent Welshmen p425) that Vicar Prichard was in the habit of preaching from "the rocky eminence near the house to an audience which no Church could contain" --- visited 15th May 1920

Little Quakers Field RCAM

The field next north of Bishop Beck's hospice is so called in the Tithe Schedule. The name has been forgotten, and nothing is known which connects the spot with the Society of Friends, who had no meeting house in this village – visited 20th April 1920

Ridgeway House,

now a home for the elderly, was visited by Nelson in 1802, when it was the house of Admiral Sir Thomas Foley

LLawhaden house, LLawhaden

L-shaped building of 17th century but possibly of earlier origin : 2 storey main block with a one storey wing. Slate hung end. 2 full height gabled projections above the entrance porch. Principal post-med. residence in LLawhaden

Garden wall, Tower And Water Feature, LLawhaden The tower is a garden viewing tower with external stone stairs over flat voussoir doorway, leading to an arched and domed sitting alcove in its east elevation. The west elevation has a flat stone voussoir entry doorway to a barrel vaulted ground-floor with south end window and later doorway to road in north end.

There is also a square water feature with dressed stone voussoirs on two sides and small single storey stone-built gabled house. Both structures appear to be of late-C18th/early-C19th date.

LLawhaden Castle, Gardens, LLawhaden

Gardens & possible landscaping features associated with LLawhaden Castle A survey of 1326 records two gardens at LLawhaden Castle; one of an acre on the east side and 'the Park', of four acres, on the north-east side. The first of these can be fitted into the part of the field on the east and south-east where the ground falls away to the east between the Castle moat & Churchill Wood. 'The Park' may have lain on, or below, steep slopes below the north-east side of the Castle. Possible fishponds lie in the dell some 300m north-west of the Castle

Two earthwork features can be identified outside the Castle moat:

1. A rectilinear platform, roughly 40m north-west to south-east by 10-15m & up to about 4.0m high. This is terraced out from the steep slopes on the north-east side of the Castle. This could be a viewing platform associated with 'the Park garden' and possibly with 'the wooden buildings outside the walls' also mentioned in 1326. However, it is perhaps more likely that it is a spoil heap dating from the clearance of the Castle ruins

2. Abutting the Castle ditch on the north-west is a roughly D-shaped enclosure, about 43m north-south by 30m. This has been much mutilated by recent quarrying/digging. The bank around this enclosure appears more substantial than those of the adjoining hedge banks. RCAHMW

LLawhaden Mill

1765. Rubble. Slated. 3-storey. Wide elliptical arched entrance South. Chambered head arch under which water flows to undershot wheel. Machinery in place. RCAHMW

Holgan Camp

Holgan Camp is a tapering oval enclosure, set upon a steep-sides, east-facing promontory, about 110m east-west by 60m, delineated by double banks and ditches on the west, with an entrance at their southern limit, elsewhere defined by scarps above steep natural slopes. A limited excavation yielded radio-carbon dates indicating occupation in the 3rd-4th centuries BC.

Tal-Y-Bont Deserted Medieval Village

Deserted Medieval village situated East of LLawhaden discovered during RCAHMW aerial reconnaissance on 11th February 2009. RCAHMW).

Llysyfran,

Nowadays the whole place is dominated by the large reservoir, opened by Princess Margaret in 1972, built originally to ensure a good water supply for the Milford Haven oil industry.

Llys y Fran reservoir is situated within the Llys y Fran country park, south of the Preseli Hills, Pembrokeshire. The reservoir is 212 acres and is one of the largest game fisheries in SW Wales, with rainbow and Brown trout. The country park is 350 acres, mainly grasslands and woodlands (sessile oak predominates).

The little Celtic Church dedicated to St Meilyr has strong associations with Howel Davies, one of the best known Pembrokeshire Evangelists of the 19th century religious revivals.

Llys Y Vran 1839 Lewis Topographical Dictionary of Wales

LLYS-Y-VRÂN, a parish, in the poor-law union of Narberth, hundred of Dungledy, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 7 miles (North East.) from Haverfordwest; contains 191 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated nearly in the centre of the county, comprises a small tract of arable and pasture land, the whole, with only a very small exception, inclosed and in a good state of cultivation; the soil is various, but generally productive. The scenery, though not distinguished by any striking peculiarity of feature, is agreeably diversified; and the views over the adjacent country are interesting and extensive. The living is a discharged rectory, rated in the King's Books at £3. 0. 5d., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord Milford and Col. Scourfield, the former of whom has two turns and the latter one: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £95; and there is a glebe of one acre, valued at £3 per annum. The Church, dedicated to St. Meilyr, who flourished about the middle of the fifth century, presents no architectural details of importance. There is a place of worship for Calvinistic Methodists, in which a Sunday school is also held. In 1734, James Philipps left £220 for founding and endowing schools here and at East Walton, but this place has never derived any benefit from the bequest.

The Pembrokeshire Coast National Park by Dillwyn Miles.

The little Church has a medieval font with claws cut in the Angles of base. Its curate in 1741, the Rev. Howel Davies, embraced Nonconformity and became known as the "Apostle of Pembrokeshire"

The Parish Church dedicated to St Meilyr --RCAM

A small much restored structure consisting of nave, chancel, and double Bell coat above the west gable. In the south wall of the nave is a semicircular recess, 6ft wide, 5ft deep, and 6ft 8in high similar to that at Gumfreston; this is lighted by a modern trifoliated opening. On the south side of the chancel is a plain recess apparently meant for a seat? All the windows of the building are modern, and a modern vestry has been erected in the south east angle. The octagonal font 21ins across with a basin 17in. in diameter and a depth of 7in., chamfers off to a circular shaft and base stone with four claws at the Angles. The total height is 25 ½ in. It is probably of 14th century. Only one Bell is in position. Its companion lies on the floor of the nave, having lost its clapper; it is dated 1632. visited 11th August 1915.

Velindre Cross Incised Stone

Serving as one of the posts of the gate leading from the country road to the farmstead of Velindre is a stone 54 inches high by 30 inches wide; it bears an incised cross the full size of which is 27 inches vertically by 11 ½ inches diagonally. The cross is formed of double lines, and in each of the intersecting angles is a roundel with a small central stud. The upper part of the cross is formed into a half circle, the arms terminating at the inner line of the semicircle. The lower half circle was never completed. The vertical of the cross below the intersection is slightly longer than the length above the intersection, and ends in a triangular foot which encloses a small circle and a dot. The stone does not occupy its original position, but there is no tradition of its former whereabouts. It should be removed at once from the risk of damage to which it is now exposed – visited August 1915.

Parc y marl Rath

This is an oval enclosure on Parc y marl Farm. It has a length of 140 ft and a breadth of 110ft. The rampart facing north rises nearly 3 ft and falls 7ft to the surface; on the south side it has almost entirely disappeared. There is no trace of a ditch. The entrance (width about 18ft) was to the east, where the rampart falls gently to the level. A break in the bank shows it to have been formed of a mixture of earth and small stones. The site on which the work stands is known as Parc y Castell; the land falls towards the north.- visited 11th August 1915

Velindre Earthwork

On the field next west from Velindre farm house is a circular earthwork which is not marked on the 6 in Ord sheet. The enclosed area has a diameter of 130ft. The fairly well preserved bank rises 3ft and falls 5ft to a ditch, now practically filled in by cultivation; a slight counterscarp is visible to the west. The entrance was probably 10ft wide; it has been much altered. - visited 11th August 1915.

Earthwork

Immediately north of the parish Church are the slight remains of what probably was a mount Castle, now too undefined to be classified with certainty. Some years ago extensive leveling was done and quarrying started for earth and stone. The site is known to and still called by the older inhabitants Y Castell. The Pem. Arch Survey suggests that the work is of sepulchral origin, but the local name is opposed to that conjecture. The site is not marked as an antiquity on the 6in Ord. Sheet

Loveston,

South Pembrokeshire Place Names - P. Valentine Harris

Loveston. 1362, Lovellston. 1509 - 23, Lovelston. Lovells tun.' OE. name 'Lovel,' Anglo-french Lovell.

Loveston 1839 Lewis Topographical Dictionary of Wales

Loveston, a parish, in the union and hundred of Narberth, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 5 miles (S. S. W.) from Narberth; contains 170 inhabitants. This parish is situated in the south-eastern part of the county, and intersected by the turnpike-road leading from Pembroke to Carmarthen. It comprises a moderate extent of arable and pasture land, the whole inclosed and cultivated; the soil is fertile and productive.

Coal & Culm

The substratum is partly stone-coal of good quality, but it is not at present worked; only a small quantity of culm being raised, sufficient for the immediate supply of the inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, rated in the King's Books at £4. 5. 5., and endowed with £600 royal bounty; present net income, £109; patron, Earl Cawdor. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £90; and there is a glebe of two acres, valued at £5 per annum.

Church St Leonard:

Glynne Welsh Churches .June 1867

This Church has nave with small north and south transepts, chancel and western tower. The whole is of the local type. The tower tapers in a remarkable degree, and has a rude battlement and corbel table, a square turret at the north west, rising high, and no string courses. There is a single lancet on the west side, and single narrow belfry windows. The tower arch to the nave is pointed and rude. The tower is vaulted within. The transepts are very short, and are vaulted. The Chancel arch is pointed upon imposts; on the south side of it is a hagioscope, square, and divided by a mullion. To the south west of the chancel is the projection common in these churches. The east window is Perpendicular, square headed, labelled, of three lights. North of the chancel are no windows. One window to the south is square headed. Near the south door internally is an oblong opening. The font has a square bowl of a circular stem with a square base, and chevrom moulding under the bowl. The porch, as usual, is very large, and the doorways plain pointed.

RCAM Pembroke 1920

In the recess on the south side of the chancel is a square squint divided by a mullion, on the north is a smaller square undivided squint. Both transepts are plain vaulted.

The Old Parish Churches of South West Wales by Mike Salter 1994

Tiny openings on either side of the chancel arch serve the transepts as squints. The transepts, nave, and the later medieval west tower all have pointed tunnel vaults. The porch may be 14c and the chancel is 15c. Used to have Victorian box pews till 1960's

Ludchurch,

South Pembrokeshire Place Names - P. Valentine Harris.

Ludchurch. 1324, Ecclesia de Loudes. 1377 Londchirch. It has been suggested that it is from W. Ilwyd, 'the adorable, the blessed one,' but it is more probably from the personal name 'Loud.' . Early 13c Church dedicated to St Elidyr, south aisle later

Ludchurch 1839 Lewis Topographical Dictionary of Wales

Ludchurch, a parish, in the union and hundred of Narberth, county of Pembroke, in South Wales, 4½ miles (S. E.) from Narberth; containing 220 inhabitants. This parish lies in the south-eastern part of the county, about two miles eastward from the road between Narberth and Tenby. Its surface is uneven, and the soil of various kinds: the lands are but partially inclosed and cultivated.

Quarrying

The substratum is limestone of very superior quality, which is worked upon an extensive Scale: the stone is susceptible of a beautiful polish, and many slabs raised from the quarries have been manufactured into elegant mantel-pieces, and used for other ornamental purposes; it is also burnt for manure, there being no fewer than six kilns for this purpose in constant operation, for the supply of the more northern parts of the county.

The living is a discharged rectory, rated in the King's Books at £3. 14. 4½., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £84; and there is a glebe of ten acres, valued at £10 per annum. The Church, dedicated to St. Elidyr, is a neat and well-built edifice, situated in a bleak part of the parish, on a limestone rock, which has been quarried all round, leaving the sacred fabric many feet above the level of the adjacent surface. A meeting-house was built a few years ago by the Baptists and Independents conjointly.

The nave and chancel are 13c. The west tower and the south aisle are 16c. The aisle has three arches on octagonal piers towards the nave and two towards the chancel. One nave pier has a head carved upon the top of it.

The tomb of Annie Sophia grand daughter of Josiah Wedgewood decorated with some of her grandfathers first tiles is in churchyard.

A Short Guide to Ludchurch

The foundations of Ludchurch as a community were laid by the Knight's of St John who were dedicated to keeping the pilgrim routes open all the way from Jerusalem to St David's and on these routes at convenient places they built hospices (half hospitals half hostels) Ludchurch was one such site.

The Church is basically divided into two halves by a row of arches which are about 800 years old. The pillars are Norman but the arches themselves show the transition from Norman to Gothic in that they rise to a little peak. At the heads of the pillars are examples of carving with shields which would originally have carried heraldic symbols there are also some carved roses and crude faces. There are two Holy water stoups one by the entrance and another on the south wall where there was another entrance at one time but the extensive quarrying all round the Church site destroyed the approach from that side. When the area was being quarried there was even an offer made to buy the Churchyard so as to quarry the site.

In June the Churchyard is carpeted with blue irises.

In the far south east corner there is what is known as the Wedgwood Tomb. "Annie Sophia", grand- daughter of Josiah Wedgwood founder of the Wedgewood Pottery firm, Husband is buried there. He was Wilfred Baugh Allen. When Josiah Wedgewood died in 1790 the first batch of tiles he made were shared between some of his grandchildren. "Annie Sophia" treasured hers first having them built into a fireplace at her home at Cilrhiw Mansion and then when they moved transferring them to Rosemount Tenby. At her wish they were fixed into her Husband's grave.

There is also the grave of John Henry Martin who died in 1823 age 70, at his death was supposed to be the last surviving officer to have accompanied Captain Cook on his third voyage around the world.

There is also the remains of an old Cross - called the Plague Cross and the bronze lamp at the Churchyard Gate was at one time part of the street lighting in Bournemouth.

The Parish Church of Ludchurch dedicated to St Elidyr RCAM

The original Church appears to have been a single chamber 50 ½ ft by 14 ½ ft without structural division between chancel and nave. To this building at a later period was added a south aisle of the same length but 2ft narrower, the south wall being replaced by an arcade of 5 bays. The easternmost pier, now within the present chancel is square; the next two piers are octagonal; the two still further to the west are circular; all are pointed and have neither capitals nor mouldings. The windows are mostly modern. There are north and south doors, each with stoups; the south door is now blocked. The front of the stoup at the north door is ornamented with a human face between two roses. The west tower 16 ½ ft by 15 1/2ft is placed at the end of the present nave with which it communicates by a pointed doorway now blocked; it is of three storeys. The stair turret containing 67 steps occupies the northeastern angle. The ground story is vaulted. The font may be of any date; though of early shape it is probably not coeval with the early 13th century building. The edifice is built on a limestone rock which has been quarried so as to leave the Church and surrounding burial ground many feet above the adjoining level. In the churchyard is the base of a cross – visited 23rd April 1915.

On 17 Jan., 1893, a faculty was obtained for the restoration of Ludchurch Parish Church

Ludchurch St Elidyr

August 20 1869 This Church is curiously situated on an abrupt eminence of limestone, of which the sides on the southwest are precipitously scarped. It is of the local type of South Pembrokeshire and consists of two parallel aisles of bodies, of which the northern forms the chancel at its east end, a western tower and a north porch.

The tower resembles others of the district, is plain and of a somewhat military character, has battlements and corbel table, but neither buttress nor stringcourse, and very thick walls. At the northeast a square turret rises above the tower, the belfry windows single and oblong, other openings merely narrow slits.

On the west side is a plain pointed doorway.

The chancel is divided from the nave by a very rude pointed arch upon imposts. The nave arcade has three rude wide pointed arches, the two western piers being circular but very course. Eastward of these is a huge wall pier, on which is a corbel or bracket, beyond which are two smaller and lower arches, remarkably rude, dividing the aisle from the chancel; the pier is square and of plain wall, but these arches have been strengthened by some modern masonry roughly executed which distorts the general appearance. There is a single lancet window closed at the south, most other windows modern; but at the east of the chancel is one of two lights, square headed and Edwardian in character, at the east of the south aisle one with two obtuse headed lights. The interior is dark. The font has a square bowl chamfered at the angles on a stem. The north porch is large. There are the steps of a cross in the churchyard

1847 Commission on Education in Wales (the Blue Book) Ludchurch

This small school is held in a Chapel built jointly by the Baptists and Independents about three years ago. It is well lighted but cold as it is neither ceilinged nor rendered. It is in good repair. The furniture consists of a pulpit, two tables 8 settles and 4 benches but there were no maps nor prints of any description. The master had been a farmer until August last, and knows no welsh; all the people in the neighbourhood speak English. He complained much of the carelessness of parents in not educating their children but thought that poverty was the chief cause.

All the scholars (except two or three) were labourers children, and all present this day (except two) Read in the Testament, but none correctly They were not used to be questioned on what they read. There were none present that were learning arithmetic.

There is no Sunday School in this parish, but many of those who had answer my questions are going to some of the Sundays schools in the neighbourhood.

Mr Morris John schoolmaster of Longstone, informed me that labourers wages with food are from 8d to 9d a day and on their own finding 1s to 1s 2d a day; carpenters and masons on their own finding 1s 6d to 2s; farm servants 30s to £10., some get £12 per year; female servants £2 to £4 some £5. There is no gratuitous education for the poor in the parish; a great many children are growing up without any education at all. Many of the farmers are utterly destitute of education; but if the generality of the people could, they would have their children educated. The labourers and others in the neighbourhood are steady and sober

“Egypt” Cromlech RCAM

On either side of the high road about 50yds south of the hamlet of “Egypt” are three stones, now partially buried. These are locally said to be the remains of a cromlech. What may have been the capstone of the structure, a boulder some 6ft in length, lies in the ditch close by – visited 21st May 1915

Longstone Camp RCAM

A work 300yds north-east of Longstone hamlet, known to many as Brandywell Camp. It would seem to have been of circular form, but the bank to the south and east is barely to be traced.

The rampart which remains has a length of 500ft; it rises 4ft and has a fall of 10ft to a ditch 3ft deep. The southwest end of the bank is distinctly curved and may have formed one side of the vanished entrance. At this point there is much surface stone. The field is known “old Castle Park” visited 23rd April 1915.

Castell Meherin RCAM

The earthwork known by the name of Castlell Meherin, which if Welsh, would mean Weather's Castle or “The Wethers” is from several points of view worthy of close attention by Welsh archaeologists. It is placed on the summit of a Long narrow ridge of ground about 4 miles to the north of the Bristol Channel and 673 ft above sea level. The ridge runs parallel with the northern shore of the channel, and is the first suitable site for an observation camp that an enemy landing upon the south eastern shore of the county between Ragwen and Giltar Points would arrive at in an attack upon the district. Behind this ridge the surface of the country is broken into a confused mass of hills and valleys which ramify in all directions, and steadily increasing height, depth and difficulty, eventually culminate in the Prescelly range. South of a line drawn about 4 miles on either hand of Castell Meherin the place names of the district are almost exclusively English. North of the line they are as distinctively Welsh. It is clear that Castell Meherin was constructed to serve as a border fortress of importance.

Roman?

The earthwork has suffered much injury within the recollections of the writer of the present notice[1915]. Thirty years ago the ramparts were in fairly perfect condition, and it was then possible to make out, not merely the general character of the earthwork, but also features which differentiated it from the great Hill camps of Wales. In shape it is a Long rectangle, the length of the interior being about 700ft. With a breadth of about 250 ft; the Long axis followed the direction of the Hill. The angles which were then perfect, were slightly rounded, and it had all the trim symmetrical appearance of a Roman earthwork. Indeed, so obvious was the resemblance that when the site was visited by the Cambrian Archaeological Association in the year 1851 “some of the party considered the remains to indicate a Roman construction” (Arch Camb II ii 325). Later, an able local explorer Mr Edward Laws F.S.A. pronounced it to be Roman (Little England beyond Wales 1888 p40) whilst in 1892 the editor of Owen's Pembrokeshire (I 108n3) spoke of it as “an old Roman encampment” Its position, however, is hardly that of the regular Roman fort, and its proportions not those of the usual Roman plan. Moreover, if it were of Roman origin there would probably be indications of a road traversing the interior. Many of its original features have been obliterated, the banks have been levelled, and it is now impossible to locate the entrances. The broad and rather shallow ditch that encircled the position immediately outside the rampart has in some places been entirely filled up, and in others nearly so.

So far as we were able to ascertain, no relics of any description have been found in or around the camp, and it may be conjectured that the position was not occupied for a lengthened period. In the absence of positive evidence of the people by whom it was constructed, all speculations relating thereto must be regretted that these were not recognised and carefully recorded while the opportunities for doing so were more abundant than they are at present. The ground plan of Castell Meherin should be compared with the faint indications of Castle Fleming, and the more complete remains of Romans Castle –visited 23rd April 1915.

Maenclochog

(ringing Stone) [Over a well there was once a cap stone which rang if struck, hence "ringing stone"]

Maenclochog is a village and community in Pembrokeshire, south-west Wales. It is also an electoral ward comprising an area that brings together the villages of Llanycefn, Maenclochog and Rosebush. It is a large village near Presely's in a very Welsh area. Parish include villages of Rosebush and Vorlan It has a Church (St Mary's) with Tower (unusual in a Welsh area),³ Chapels and it is a centre the local area once having a blacksmith, .Miller, Carpenter, Lime burner, WheelWright, Draper, and 10 pubs.

The centre of the village is taken up with a spacious village Green and a raised churchyard. The settlement has a rather grotesque collection of building styles, but it is a fascinating place.

Maenclochog

Be that as it may, we now make our entry into the village of Maenclochog, a bleak-looking place enough, where the storm-rent trees beside the roadway attest the violence of the Winter gales that sweep across these bare, lofty uplands. Towards the farther end of the village, at a widening of the ways, stands the parish Church, a structure of no great antiquity, dedicated to St. Mary . The Clergyman, who has ministered here for upwards of thirty years, now courteously introduces us to the well-tended interior, the most noteworthy feature of which is a plain old font, with a singular cup-shaped recess upon its eastern face, the purpose of which we are quite at a loss to conjecture. St. Mary's Church has no tower, but at the western end rises a low turret containing a musical peal of bells. It is a remarkable fact, indeed, that Throughout this mountain district Church towers are conspicuous by their absence; whereas, in the English country farther south, the tall slender Bell-tower usually forms one of the most noticeable features of the parish Church. A marble cross used, we are informed, to adorn the chancel gable; but this has Long since been removed to the limbo of things forgotten.

In olden times, it was customary at Maenclochog to draw the water for baptism from St. Mary's Well, a natural spring that rises just without the village. Near to this well are some tumbled stones, that once supported a large horizontal slab. Tradition tells that this stone, when struck, gave forth a loud ringing sound, which did not cease until the water from the holy well had been brought into the Church. Hence the name of Maenclochog, which, being interpreted, signifies the village of the 'ringing rock.' It is much to be regretted that this curious object was destroyed many years ago, because, forsooth, the sound thereof was supposed to frighten passing horses!

At the foot of the village stands a large, rambling inn, backed by the singularly artificial-looking rocks known as ' the Castle,' whence the house takes its title. In a country where lodgings of any sort are so few and far between, the wayfarer may do worse than pitch his camp for a night in these unassuming quarters.

Two inscribed stones removed from nearby Llandeilo to the Church are of particular interest in that they may commemorate two brothers Coimagnus and Andagellus the sons of Cavetus. The former has the inscription in Latin only, and the latter in Latin and Ogham, and they date from the 6C

History of Maenclochog

The Barony of Maenclochog held a area of modern Pembrokeshire, Included the southern end of the Preseli Hills know as the great common of Mynddy Preseli also the area know as Mynydd Bach, Rhosfach, Mynachlog-ddu, Llangolman, Rosebush, Mynydd-ddu, Pant Maenog, Carnafr, and the villages of Llantilo, Llwydarth, Llandarth, Mynachlog-ddu, within the Medieval Cantref of Cemaes.

The barony also included and covered most of the Llangolman Character area lying across several parishes and encompassing the upper part of the valley of the Eastern Cleddau and its tributaries, the Llangolman area is well defined to the north where it bounds Rhosfach and Mynachlog-ddu areas and to the east against Glandy Cross. To the south the boundary is less clear, although the area to the south consists of larger farms and larger fields than those of Llangolman. A definite boundary does not exist, but rather a zone of transition extending for perhaps one or two kilometres, The Llangolman character area belonged to the Barony and Lordship or Manor of Maenclochog.

920 - 1093 The Medieval Castle which was a Motte & Bailey Castle built with a large outer wall of the fortress type it was situated to defend the open mountainous district at the foot of Pembrokeshire's Preseli Hills, This Barony of Land comprised of a considerable extent of land, the greater portion of which is unenclosed and mostly uncultivated, The Village of Maenclochog was the main Village in the Area of which was of considerable size and occupies the summit of a bleak and barren eminence of the open mountainous district

The Baronial Castle of Maenclochog was a Castle held directly of the Welsh King as of his Welsh Kingdom of Deheubarth.

1100 the The Maenclochog area belonged to the Baronial Castle and the Manor of Maenclochog, and the Land of the Ancient Welsh Barony of Maenclochog was brought under Anglo-Norman control by Baron Fitzmartins who retained the Castle of Maenclochog on the limits of his newly acquired territory of his Barony of Camaes

1201 The area of Maenclochog which comprises the settlement at Maenclochog itself - was held under Anglo-Norman tenure. A tenure of land originally subject to Military Service, later commuted to a money payments.

Maenclochog had its own Court Baron and was like other Cemaes Manors held on an annual lease from the Barony of Camaes, this one being assessed in an Extent at one Knights Fee However, like most of the south eastern part of the Barony, within Mynydd Preseli, this area continued to be held under the Welsh systems of Tenure

1201 It had been obtained by the Baron of Roche , who were the over Lords of Llangwm by the mid 13th-century, along with the Knight's fees at Monington and Llanychaer, and their tenure continued into the 14th century

1201 There was documentary evidence of a Castle being here and it was the main village in the area in the 13th Century.

1257 The Castle of Maenclochog was 'destroyed'

1275 The Castle of Maenclochog is mentioned in the Chronicles as having been partly destroyed by the Welsh in a Welsh Raid

1300 The Barony of Maenclochog was held by Baron David de la Roche , Lords of Llangwm in the 14th-century, when it was assessed at one Knight's Fee

1320 Llandeilo Llwydarth along with the Chapel at Llangolman to the east were annexed to the Vicarage of Maenclochog, which in turn was granted to St Dogmael's Abbey by Baron David de la Roche

1326 The Castle of Maenclochog was in the control of the Anglo-Norman Baron Fitzmartins who retained it as part of his Chief Barony of Caemas, They were succeeded by Baron Audleys

1376 A reference in an Inquisition Dated 1376 imply that the Castle of Maenclochog was still in use

1440 The Norman masonry curtain wall of the Castle was demolished before 1440

1498 By the late 15th-century, considerable lands within the Llangolman character area had been amassed from the Manor of Maenclochog by a local yeoman family, the Llywelyns.

1498 they granted 'all their lands in Llangolman and at Bwlch-y-clawdd (Temple Druid) in Maenclochog', which were held by Welsh tenure, to Lewis ap David ap Gruffudd Fychan of Llangolman, yeoman, 'on account of great necessity and poverty

1536 The Barony of Cemaes was conterminous with the later Hundred of Cemaes, which was created in 1536, but many Feudal Rights and obligations persisted, some until as late as 1922 The Barony of Maenclochog was now referred to as a Manor of Maenclochog

1594 Most of the Llangolman area also belonged to the Lordship or Manor of Maenclochog, held from the Barony of Cemaes by the Baron Roche Lords of Llangwm in the 13th -14th Century when it was assessed at One Knight's Fee

1594 In a later Extent, the Barony and Manor of Maenclochog was, like others in in the Cantref of Cemaes, held on an annual lease from the Barony of Cemaes, that is one being assessed at 3s 8d

1600 There was no mention of the Maenclochog Castle in a survey of the area in the 16th Century, Maenclochog, Pembrokeshire, a village and a parish in Pembrokeshire. The village stands on an affluent of the river Cleddau, under Precelly Mountain, and has a station on the North Pembroke and Fishguard railway. It took its name from a cromlech which was destroyed by the peasantry, in hope of finding treasures under it; and has a post and money order office under Haverfordwest; telegraph office at railway station. A butter Market is held on Wednesdays, and fairs are held monthly, excepting Jan., Feb., and June.

2007 Experts found remains of the hearth of a Medieval Manor House and fragments of Medieval Pottery in the inner walls of the Castle grounds of Maenclochog, Experts are equally exciting with the discovery of what was thought to be an Iron Age settlement which would date somewhere between 700 BC and 43 AD. discovered inside the inner walls of the Castle of Maenclochog
The Castle site

2007 Dyfed Archaeological Trust undertook a two-week excavation working with the community of Maenclochog with the objective of developing a better understanding of the history of the village, and, in particular, to investigate the Castle site believed to lie beneath the village car park.

Two trenches were opened. The wall of a Manorial Pound, the remains of the Castle wall, and a defensive bank and ditch were found. A radiocarbon sample from below the defensive bank returned a date between AD 880 and AD 1020, possibly indicating that there was a defended settlement at Maenclochog before the stone Castle was built following the Anglo-Norman conquest of Pembrokeshire in AD 1093.

Inside the Castle area, part of a round house was revealed. Surprisingly, Pottery dating from the 12 and 13th centuries, a radiocarbon date of between AD 980 and AD 1160, and plant remains from a central hearth suggest that the Roundhouse was probably occupied right up until the Anglo-Norman conquest of Pembrokeshire.

Castell Maenclochog Or Maenclochog Castle, Sometimes Y Gaer RCAHMW

The reputed site of Maenclochog Castle comprises a small flat-topped rock outcrop that rises on the southern edge of the Pound, a rather irregular curvilinear walled enclosure of about 0.15ha. The outcrop in its present form is sometimes thought to have been shaped into a Castle mount or motte. It is oval or subrectangular in plan, about 19m across at the base and 3.2-4.0m high, with a level summit 13.3-14m across. The Pound is a ruinous drystone enclosure roughly 47-51m across. It is probably eighteenth century and was the site of livestock Markets. It has been identified both as a Castle enclosure or Bailey, associated with the mound and as a later Prehistoric settlement enclosure.

Excavations in September 2007 examined a section of the Pound perimeter and a small area of the interior. It was found that the Pound wall rested above the foundations of a massive 2.2m wide stone wall. Beyond this was a large defensive ditch with the remains of a clay rampart between the two. Medieval Pottery was recovered. In the interior parts of two Roundhouses were encountered. It is probable that the Pound enclosure started as a settlement enclosure.

Roundhouses are characteristic of settlement in the region from the later Prehistoric and through the Roman period.

This was adapted as a Castle, probably in the twelfth-thirteenth century. The mount would have been crowned by a great tower of timber or stone and there would have been a court or mansion in the Bailey. This may have been enclosed by an earthwork and timber rampart before the great wall was built. John Wiles, RCAHMW, 17 October 2007

1839 Mary's St otherwise Maenclochog (Maen-Clochog) Lewis Topographical Dictionary of Wales

Mary's, St., otherwise Maenclochog (MAEN-CLOCHOG), a parish, in the union of Narberth, comprising the townships of Maenclochog and Vorlan, the former in the hundred of Kemmes, and the latter in that of Dungleddy, county of Pembroke, South Wales; containing 503 inhabitants, of which number 456 are in the township of St. Mary's, or Maenclochog, 12 miles (N. E.) from Haverfordwest. This place derived its name "Maenclochog" from a large stone, several tons in weight, so nicely poised upon three small upright stones, as to vibrate on the slightest touch, and, upon its being struck, to sound like a Bell: this curious relic was destroyed by some of the inhabitants, who, induced by the vain expectation of finding some hidden treasure, blew it up with gunpowder. The parish, which is surrounded by the parishes of Nevern, Morvil, Henry's-moat, and Llanycefn, is situated in a mountainous district, and comprises an area of about 1000 acres, whereof part is arable, part pasture, &c., and about two acres woodland; the chief agricultural produce being barley and oats. A large portion of the Percelly mountain, the highest in this part of Wales, is within its limits: the ancient Welsh name of this mountain is Preswylva, signifying "a place of residence," and is derived from its having been the resort of the natives, on account of its security, in the intestine wars by which this portion of the principality was agitated during the earlier periods of its history. It was well clothed with forest timber, affording shelter to such as took refuge in its recesses, but now presents a bare and sterile aspect, exhibiting some small vestiges of old encampments, probably constructed by the natives. The village, which occupies the summit of a bleak and barren eminence, is of considerable size, and the inhabitants, with the exception of such as are engaged in working a quarry of slate of good quality, are employed in agriculture. A Fair is held on the 18th of September, for cattle, sheep, &c., which is in general well attended. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant; present net income, £70; patron, T. Bowen, esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £150, of which £100 are payable to Mr. Bowen, and £50 to the vicar, who has also a glebe of two acres, valued at £2. 10. per annum. The Chapels of LLandilo and Llangolman were formerly Chapels of ease attached to the vicarage, but they have been endowed, and subsequently augmented with Queen Anne's Bounty, the two districts being erected into distinct parishes: they are now perpetual curacies, held as one incumbency. Maenclochog Church, dedicated to St. Mary, is situated in the centre of the village. There are two places of worship for Independents, with a Sunday school held in each of them.

Vorlan,

a township, in the parish of St. Mary's, or Maenclochog, union of Narberth, hundred of Dungledy, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 9 miles (N. by W.) from Narberth; containing 47 inhabitants. This township is of very small extent, and the vicar of the parish was formerly the only inhabitant of it that was assessed to the relief of the poor. Vorlan 1839 Lewis Topographical Dictionary of Wales

In 1870-72, John Marius Wilson's Imperial Gazetteer of England and Wales described Y Forlan like this:

"Vorlan, a hamlet in Maenclochog parish, Pembroke; 8½ miles NNW of Narberth. Pop., 29. Houses, 6".

Rosebush

is a small village about 1 mile north west of the village of Maenclochog. Slate was extensively quarried nearby, its export facilitated by the railway in the 19th century.

Rosebush Slate Quarry.

The only undertaking in the region to operate on a really large Scale (albeit briefly) and certainly the only one to have its own railway.

The early history is obscure, it does seem that T.R. Hutton also took rights to this land when he commenced at Bellstone in 1837. It is not known if he worked here or even if any quarrying had been done at this time, but it is unlikely that such obvious outcrops could have been ignored. In 1842 the land was bought by William Young but again we do not know what work if any was done and in 1862 he sold on to William Williams, a Narberth Draper. Williams must have died soon afterwards as in 1863 his widow, Mary, let it to John Davies and William Keylock.

In October the following year this item appeared in the Mining journal:

-"There are several rather valuable veins of slate in the northern district of Pembrokeshire and some 20 or 30 years ago the extensive quarries on the breast of the Precelly mountains near Maenclochog were worked and an enormous capital sunk there. These quarries either from want of capital, bad management or some other cause have ceased working for a number of years until a short time ago they were started by a London company and a good many hands are now employed. The same company have taken or are in treaty for commencing to work other quarries in the same county including Llangolman, LLandilo, Tyrch &c. The extraordinary demand for slates has, no doubt, been the chief inducement in taking these quarries and it is to be hoped that they will turn out profitable to the enterprising speculators. “

This report like so many in the Mining Journal at the time would have been submitted by the promoters and the style of this one is redolent of John Davies himself and refers to the Rosebush Slate Co. which he and Keylock set up, obtaining capital from amongst others, a Mr Hodges. Serious work must have been intended as some trouble was taken to obtain a reduction in royalty from 1/8th ad valorem to 1/16th. A Benjamin Rees was manager. Shortly afterwards there was a further brief item in the Mining Journal naming the Rosebush company, saying that “An enormous amount of capital has been sunk a short time ago”. Most of this enormous amount of capital was the £8000 which Davies and Keylock reputedly received for the lease!

In spite of a firm Market, transport costs and royalties meant they were on a loser. They did negotiate with a Josiah Thomas to take over their lease but this fell through and the company wound up in 1868.

In 1869 Edward Cropper, a retired Manchester businessman living in Kent heard of the quarry through his step-son Joseph Macaulay who had business interests in the county. In spite of advanced age and ill health he bought the freehold from Mrs Williams for £3750 and bought the plant, such as it was from the receivers of Rosebush Slate for £800. His purchase of the freehold not only freed him from rent and royalties, but also gave him security of tenure which enabled him to invest freely in infrastructure. With ample means and no shareholders hungry for instant profits he was able to take a Long view on such investment, which notably included the Narbeth road and Maenclochog Railway.

He put Macaulay in charge, assisted by William Pritchard, by now the most experienced manager in the county, whose job at Cronllwyn had just fallen through. Wisely ignoring pre-existing work, an opening was made part-way up the hillside on new ground to the south, working on 4 terraces. All Tipping of waste was to the north, good block being taken to the south by tramways on each level. A self-acting incline brought material from levels 1 and 2 down to level 3 and another from 3 to 4.

Roofing slate being made on levels 3 and 4.

It was on these upper levels that Macaulay's ingenuity over-rode Pritchard's experience when a windmill was erected apparently to drive dressing machines. The windmill was damaged in a storm before drive-gear could be devised and the dressing machines were never powered.

A further incline lowered finished product to the ground level stock yard and block to a mill which had 4 saws and 3 planers, driven by a Francis water turbine via underfloor shafting. A contemporary report said that: “This machinery did its work famously and required but few hands”. When working progressed downward below level 4, rubbish was removed via a tunnel on level 5, a tunnel on level 6 drained, carried block to the mill and rubbish to the tip. It also provided an exit for roofing slates made in the pit. Latterly, slates were made in the mill using a treadle operated slate dresser thus forming, albeit in miniature, the only example in south Wales of an Integrated Mill, processing both slab and roofing slate.

Water supply for the mill was obtained by damming the original working, fed by an inverted siphon from Mynydd Du to the north. The tailrace supplied the quarrymen's cottages as well as Macaulay's own house.

In 1878 no less a person than C.E. Spooner (of Ffestiniog Railway fame), was called in to advise on further development. It is a tribute to the soundness of the methods that the only advice he could give was to acquire more Tipping ground adjacent to the level 6 tunnel.

The quarry was one of the best planned in Wales and after the opening of the railway, one of the very few able to load directly into standard gauge wagons. Its workforce of well over 100 and its near 5000 ton output dominated the Pembrokeshire scene. The principal product was slab said to have been in sizes up to 7 x 4 x 4. Offcuts were used to make items such as inkstands, letter weights and chessboards, which were sent to Langer, Powell & Magnus at Buckingham Palace road, London for enamelling.

The 26 cottages which still form Rosebush Terrace were models of their kind. Though having only one room above the other and a lean-to kitchen, with their slate roofs and flagged floors, they were much superior to the sort of earth floored hovel that most of the men must have been accustomed to, and let at £2 p.a. were much sought after.

Unfortunately even before the railway opened in 1877, the price of slate which had advanced almost every year since Cropper's purchase, collapsed. Besides which, with the Market moving into surplus, buyers became more choosy, opting for the more fashionable north Wales products. Up to the time of his death in 1879 it was estimated that Cropper had spent £22,000 at Rosebush and that his gross revenues had not greatly exceeded a third of that figure.

By 1880 the trade press euphemistically suggested that this quarry could do with more trade, as indeed also could the railway. Even at its peak, the quarry output would have scarcely filled 10 wagons per week. Under-utilised and burdened by the GWR's £500 p.a. charges at Narberth road (later Clynderwen), the railway closed in 1882. With both price and demand in a steepening downward spiral, Rosebush's brief glory was effectively over.

Edward Cropper's widow Margaret had married landowner Col. John Owen, son of Sir Hugh Owen. They tried to offset the quarry's decline by energetically promoting the health giving Properties of the Maenclochog air. They publicised the facilities of Precelly Hotel and put lakes and fountains, (fed by the mill supply) in their own garden to amuse visitors. The visitors may have been amused by the fountains, but the Colonel does not appear to have been amused by the visitors. Shortly after his death in 1890 Margaret wrote quoting him as having said: "Not one word can be said in favour of them. They cheat the nation, they defraud the Railway Companies of their fares, they bilk the turnpikes. No corn, no hay are wanted, no ostler to be paid, no posting, no coaching required. A pint of beer perhaps the only harvest of the town through which they pass".

These dreadful parasites were cyclists!

Some of them, it was alleged even propped their bicycles against the hotel wall to eat their sandwiches.

The re-opening of the railway in 1884 failed to restore the quarry's fortunes. Macaulay moved away, Cropper's elder son James was a professional soldier and his younger son Edward took little interest in matters at Rosebush. By 1887 William Pritchard's son Alfred had leased the quarry and moved into the 9 roomed manager's house, with the adjacent village shop being run by his two sisters.

By this time not all the cottages could be let and one was used as an office. Before the end of the 80s the railway had closed again and the quarry was idle. In 1889 an attempt was made to sell them both. There were no takers for the railway and the best that could be done with the quarry was a let at a nominal £1 p.a. as a source of tip material. In 1891 with the market recovering, Pritchard investigated the prospects for a revival. It was estimated that there was a potential for 1300 tons p.a. of roofing slates, 500 tons of slab and 3500 tons of rough block. To produce this would require another tunnel to fully work the 6 levels and a second turbine in the mill would call for doubling up on the supply pipe. With the prospect of this costing £5000 and faced with cartage costs to Fishguard of 15/- per ton, nothing was done. By 1895 when the railway reopened as the North Pembroke and Fishguard Railway, Pritchard was busy re-opening Gilfach.

Most of the quarry property was now owned by Joseph Rowlands a Birmingham solicitor, although Rosebush Terrace was bought by the Rev. Albert and Mr Walter Hughes.

In the early 1900s the Misses Pritchard were still running the shop, but apart from renting a stable, Pritchard himself had severed all connection. Some desultory work was done until c.1905 by Griffith Williams who rented both Rosebush and Bellstone at £6. 5. 0 p.a.

There was an amusing episode in 1904 when several women living in Rosebush Terrace, broke fences to extend their gardens onto quarry land. It appears from extant correspondence that

Williams found these ladies intimidating neighbours and they may well have precipitated his departure.

In 1908 when this quarry and Bellstone came up for sale, Col. Owen's daughter Edith bought them for £720 with the intention of finding a tenant to work them. She was unsuccessful.

Remains

The site abuts Bellstone, the most obvious relic being the plastered walls of the fine mill building. In one corner the mill is the pit for the water turbine. The ruined loco shed on the other side of the railway track bed matches the style of the mill. Maps show a subsidiary building to the south of the mill and a range of buildings behind the engine shed, but almost all trace of these has been lost. Also prominent are the abutments of the bridge which carried the Tipping line from 5 tunnel over the railway.

On levels 3 and 4 most of the 10 or 12 dressing sheds survive, several paired back-to-back. Where such a layout, rarely seen outside north east Wales, was adopted they were normally of different sizes, the larger being intended for slab dressing, the smaller for roofing slate. These are of identical dimensions suggesting that roofing slate was worked in one or the other according to wind direction.

On the south side of the quarry are the three much degraded inclines.

Both tunnels are open at the quarry ends; however the one on level 6 which emerged on the level is blocked at its outer end. The level 5 tunnel has a nice arch at its outer end but being partly through waste is supported by crossbars and props of light railway rails which have collapsed at one point. There is a partly flooded tunnel entering the working face at level 4 which may have been a pre-existing metal mine. Above level 1 there is some trial working.

All trace of the windmill on the Hill above has been obliterated by forestry. At level 2, cut by the workings, is a leat which may have been an early water supply.

The access track to the original (pre-Cropper) working is prominent and the pit still holds water. Some pipework is visible, both here and up valley to the north. Some distances away on the flat ground to the west, a powder house survives.

The houses of Rosebush Terrace, along the rail line to the quarry, are still occupied, several with the original slates on the roofs. At the end is the manager's house, now a cafe, and abutting it is the Misses Pritchard's shop. Local legend has it that their customers were required to drop their coins through a hole in the counter into a basin of water, so that they were cleaned before the ladies handled them. Since 1972 the dwellings have been on mains water, a matter of complaint at the time as apart from having to pay, the occupiers complained that the public supply was inferior to the quarry water.

The corrugated iron Precelly Hotel, now renamed - Tafarn Sinc - is still very much in business and the station partly reconstructed.

Mr Gareth Williams, besides restoring the water gardens has at last, with his caravan park, (where we stayed many Summers,) succeeded in promoting the area as a tourist destination. Mr William's grandfather Griffith Williams was the quarry's maintenance man. When he took up his appointment he walked from Porthgain having sailed there from Porthmadog which he had reached by walking from Aberdaron.

In 1940, Pembrokeshire like the rest of the country was getting ready for imminent invasion. Panic measures were taken Throughout the area; all signposts were taken away and hid-in a safe place and people placed strips of adhesive on windows to stop flying glass in the event of an explosion.

Steel ropes, supported by barrels, were placed across the reservoir at Rosebush, to stop landings by enemy gliders and the reservoir itself was guarded by the Home Guard. The area was also used for shooting practice, whilst an anti-Tank ambush was constructed in a field above the New Inn. The figures 44, made of white stones, had been placed on a hillside by one of the regiments stationed at Rosebush and they were demolished by the police as they formed a landmark for enemy planes. On a clear moonlit night, enemy planes used to follow the Welsh coastline on their way to bomb Liverpool and Merseyside. Searchlights were a familiar sight, and one these units was sited near Maenclochog, as well as an Observer Corps unit. There was always the threat of gas warfare and children had to carry their gasmasks with them to school.

Several planes crashed into the Preseli Mountains during the war including a Liberator and a Flying Fortress.

The highest peak, Foel Cwm Cerwyn, is only 1760ft above sea level but altitude instruments on those planes were not up to today's standards.

On the night of August 29/30th, 1940 German bombers dropped bombs on Morvil Mountain, including one time bomb which went off at 8 the following morning.

Later on in the war the railway line between New Inn and Rosebush was used for practice bombing by the R.A.F. This was done to find out the extent of damage done to railways in France by British bombers.

Due to its geographical location Pembrokeshire played an important part in the Battle of the Atlantic and thousands of American troops were stationed at Rosebush and nearby villages

Forgery charge

In 1881 at Newport, former Lincolnshire curate John Frederick Morgan, after visiting the rector Rev. Thomas Walters at Rosebush, was committed for trial for stealing a cheque book and passing forged cheques for £50 and £27.10s. He was allowed bail, and subsequently pleaded guilty at trial.

Explosion

On the evening of June 2013 an explosive device was detonated inside a letter box in the village, destroying the box and scattering cast iron fragments

The Parish Church Dedicated to St Mary - RCAM

This Church is a modern building and of no Archaeological interest. The font however, is worthy of attention. The rudely formed basin 16in by 16 in externally and 11in by 11 in internally has on one of its faces a rectangular cavity similar to that of a matrix for a brass; and in the centre of the depression so formed is a round hole, 4in in diameter and 2in deep. It may have had to do with a cover of the font. The Angles of the bowl are chamfered off to a shaft 39in in circumference let into a square base; the total height is 33 in. it is of the Norman type and is doubtless of that period. – visited 8th October 1914.

The restored Church of St Mary's was reopened for divine worship on Tuesday June 7th 1881 in the presence of the Bishop of St David's the sum of £525 had been spent on the restoration using the old walls and adding a vestry to give the Church its present almost cruciform shape.. The design was by Messrs Middleton of Cheltenham and the work was carried out by Edwin Davies of Maenclochog and David Owen of Langolman. The Church had fallen into disrepair in the middle of the 19c and the work of restoration was largely due to the efforts of Rev Thomas Walters and the Hon. Mrs Margaret Owen widow of Edward Cropper the builder of the Maenclochog Railway who had married Col. Owen in 1879 and came to live in Rosebush Villa. They did much to benefit the district including donations to the school and promoting the extension of the railway to Fishguard.. Further restoration of the Church took place in the early 1900's when the tower was raised (between 1901 & 5)

The RCAM (1914) records The Church is a modern building and of no archaeological interest but the font is worthy of attention. The report then goes on to describe the old Norman font as " a rudely formed basin worthy of attention. The disused font now lies in the churchyard.

Church on ancient foundations but has been completely rebuilt and lack old features

2009 St Mary's Church, Maenclochog RCAHMW

St Mary's Church, Maenclochog, is the centrepiece of a substantial village green, unusual in the region. It is an Anglican parish Church, with medieval origins, but the Church was thoroughly restored in 1880-1. According to a newspaper account, it was roofed in Rosebush slate over a nave roof of teak and chancel roof of oak, a vestry was added and the windows were replaced in Bath stone. The font and part of the pulpit were kept from the previous Church.

A photograph of c. 1906 shows the tower barely higher than the ridge of the nave, with a crude triangular opening on the south. But it had been raised to present height by the 1920s.

The Church contains two important 5th - 6th century inscribed stones, brought from Llandeilo Lwydiarth churchyard nearby. They appear to relate to two brothers Andagellus and Coimagnus, a third stone, probably from the same site, was moved from Bwlchyclawdd (Temple Druid) to Cenarth before 1743 is to a son of Andagellus. A most unusual group of stones to one family.

Education

1833 A schoolroom has been erected in the churchyard, and is now occupied by one of Mrs. Bevan's circulating charity schools, for the gratuitous instruction of poor children. . . " [From A Topographical Dictionary of Wales (S. Lewis, 1833).]

The State of Education in Wales 1847

There is resident Clergy but the Church is down. It is an agricultural parish with labourers receiving 6d to 7d a day with food and 1s a day on their own finding. The moral character is regarded as good. There is no resident land proprietor and no day school provision for education of the poor. Many of the population can Read and write.

Parish of Maenclochog Mr Evans's School Mr Evans has kept school for nearly 50 years and has educated most of those from 15 to 40 years old in this and the surrounding parishes. He spoke English tolerably well, but his faculties are sadly impaired by age. He has no school furniture in the Chapel in which he keeps his school. The scholars kneel at the benches to write. There was only one learning to write at the time of my visit. His scholars are composed of farmer's, mechanics and labourers children. It being New Years Day (old style), no scholars were present is a Welsh speaking primary school built in 1878 that has roughly 100 pupils ranging from 3 to 11. The school welcomes English speaking pupils and sends them usually once a week to a language learning centre in Crymych. The current head of the school is Mrs S Clarke who has had her post since 2009. The school uniform is navy blue and black.

Railway

Maenclochog.The village was served by The Maenclochog Railway formally known as the Narberth road and Maenclochog Railway which ran from Clynderwyn on the Great western Railway via Maenclochog to Rosebush.

In 1876 a railway line from Clynderwen to Rosebush was opened by the Narberth road and Maenclochog Railway company which facilitated the export of slate from the quarries. The line closed in 1882 and the name changed to North Pembrokeshire and Fishguard Railway in 1884 but was not reopened until 1895 with an extension from Rosebush to Llanychaer.

The Great Western Railway took over in 1898. The line was closed to passengers in 1937 and to freight in 1949

The tunnel just outside Maenclochog achieved fame during WW2 when it was used as a testing site for bombs by Barnes Wallis, creator of the 'bouncing bomb'.

Parc y Tywod Maenhir

On the second field west of Galchen fach farmstead is an erect maenhir, 8 ½ ft high with a slightly rounded top. At its base, and partly hidden in the soil, is a flat stone 2ft square, of uncertain purpose. - visited 24th September 1914.

Cornel Bach Stones

On the field north of Cornel bach cottages are two erect stones. The shorter of the two is 72 in high. Distance 135ft to the north east is the second and more pointed stone 81 in high. No traditions appear to attach to these boulders. They are too far apart to be the remains of a cromlech -- visited 20th October 1920.

Stone at Maenllwyd.

Immediately south of Maenllwyd farm house is an erect stone 6ft above the soil, which has doubtless given name to the farm – visited 24th September 1914.

Prysg Cromlech

A widely spread local tradition places a cromlech immediately north east of the farm house of Prys; this was destroyed some years ago. One of the stones left standing 76in above the soil has every appearance of having belonged to the cromlech. In the adjoining hedge is a partially hidden stone of similar character, which not improbably formed part of the vanished pile – visited 5th October 1914.

Eithbed Remains

Arch Camb for 1911 contains a record of the havoc wrought upon the prehistoric structures at Eithbed, a farm $\frac{3}{4}$ mile from the village of Maenclochog.

Our Inspecting Officer on the occasion of his visit to the site was accompanied by Mr William Lewis who has over 50 years personal knowledge of the site, and who confirmed the statement as to the destruction of the monuments. Apparently there were three distinct cromlechs. One to the south had three supporting pillars averaging 7ft Long and a capstone 19ft in length. These in their destroyed state can still be traced, and around them are a few stones evidently marking the outline of a cairn.

About 60 ft to the northwards is a slightly slanting supporter of another cromlech, having a length of 8ft 6in by 6ft 10in and 12 in thick. Underneath can be seen a portion of a pillar. The third cromlech has been entirely removed. The outline of a circle is now far more indistinct than when the previous examination was made of it. It appears to have had a diameter of 150ft., and was without doubt the outer ring of a tumulus. The evidence of the ruined remains on this site, together with the facts recorded above, tend to show that this was the site of a prehistorical burial ground at the foot of Prescelly Top. visited 4th August 1915.

Castell

This site is a small green field on which a striking natural outcrop of rock, almost circular in form, and having a flattened top from 10 to 12 ft above the level. It shows no signs of human workmanship. No evidences appear that a building ever stood upon it. The two fields directly south are known as Parc y gaer ucha and issa, and the field where the outcrop occurs is known as Manor Pound – visited 5th October 1914

Temple Druid

The present house was rebuilt for a hunting box early in the 19th century when the name was changed to Temple Druid; the former name of Bwlch y clawdd is still used by old inhabitants.

NOTE :- Lewis Morris, the antiquary, stated that in 1743 “ a stone 6ft Long on the roadside by Mr William Lewis's House, called Bwlch y Clawdd, in ye parish of Maenclochog” was found a stone bearing the inscription CURCAGNI FILI ANDAGELLI (Arch Camb 1896 p134). The stone has been removed to the churchyard at Canarth.

Present tasteful front garden deceptively ancient-looking, though of recent construction (within 12 years) and by present owners.CSB 24 xi 99
2. This garden is depicted on the Second Edition Ordnance Survey 25-inch map of Pembrokeshire XVIII, sheet 9 (1907). Its main elements on that map include river, carriage drive, parkland and woodland. C.S.Briggs 17.10.05

Hen Gapel, Welsh Independent Chapel, Maenclochog

Hen Gapel Independent Chapel was built in 1791, modified in 1859 and 1870. This Chapel was rebuilt in 1905, in the Arts and Craft style of the gable entry type, but closed in 1999 and has since been converted for residential use. RCAHMW, November 2010

Tabernacl Welsh Independent Chapel, Maenclochog;Tabernacle

Tabernacl Independent Chapel was built in 1847 and restored in 1884. The present Chapel, dated 1884, was restored by architect John Humphries of Treforest and builders Thomas , Watkins and Jenkins of Swansea. It is built in the Lombardic/Italian/Romanesque style of the gable entry type. RCAHMW, November 2010

Horeb Welsh Baptist Church, Rosebush, Maenclochog

Horeb Baptist Chapel was built in 1835 and later rebuilt in 1885. The present Chapel, dated 1885, is built in the Sub-Classical style with a gable-entry plan, to the design of architect George Morgan of Carmarthen. RCAHMW, October 2010

Built in the Simple round-Headed style, gable entry type. Built after 1891 (OS 1/2500 1st Edn.)
Present status [1996] : In use as Chapel

Eithbed west, Enclosure

An oval enclosure, about 48m by 42m, terraced into ground falling to the SSE, showing traces of stone-walling about its circuit; remains of rectangular structures occur within, notably in the form of a rectangular platform, some 15m north-south by 6.0m, and about the fringes of the enclosure, which appears to have been articulated with the current field boundary arrangement: OS County series (Pembroke. XVIII.5 1889) shows a spring in the southern part of the enclosure. J.Wiles 04.01.05

Eithbed west, Chambered Tomb

A possible chambered tomb, ruinous & represented only by suggested fallen capstones, with further possible examples about 40m to the south-west: OS County series (Pembroke. XVIII.5 1889) depicts a circle of seven stones, 5.0-6.0m across, immediately to the west. J.Wiles 04.01.05

Brechfa: Concentric Cropmark Enclosure Complex to South-East

A complex arrangement of later Prehistoric type settlement features south-east of Brechfa, is known from the cropmarks of its ditches. The main feature is a strongly defined settlement enclosure apparently set within a much larger outer enclosure, but there are also indications of what may be an earlier open settlement. The concentric enclosure is one of three ostensibly similar cropmark enclosures found on the massif around Brechfa.

The main enclosure is roughly rectangular, about 75m east-west by 45m, set on ground falling to the east close to the edge of the massif. It appears to be defined by sometimes overlapping double ditches with a slightly inturned west-facing entrance. A curving outer circuit has been observed on the west and south, some 80-100m distant. This has a possible entrance facing rather south of west and there are indications of a ditched approach from this to the entrance of the inner enclosure.

The outer circuit crosses an area of fainter enclosure ditches south of the inner enclosure, kinking as it does so. These fainter features appear to represent several small fields, gardens or paddocks, and at least one roundhouse perhaps 5.0m across.

There are indications of a second strongly defined enclosure some 30m downslope of the inner enclosure.

As a concentric enclosure this monument is similar to the two other sites on the Brechfa massif. However, it seems clear that the site has a more complex history in which its concentric arrangement was only one episode.

Allt Fawr Promontory Fort, ClynCemmaes

Soilmarks of a plough-levelled, or low earthwork, inland promontory fort were identified during Royal Commission aerial reconnaissance on 5th July 2012. The remains comprise a D-shaped fort set against an eastward promontory scarp which overlooks the steep-sided valley of the Afon Rhyd-afallen, south of Maenclochog village. Soilmarks show that the fort has a bivallate western defences which curve in towards the south, to form a univallate straight-sided southern end to the fort. The northern defences of the fort are obscured beneath a modern hedge bank, which might well fossilise the line of the preserved defences. Darker patches of deeper humic soil can be observed after ploughing along the western defences of the fort, particularly within the enclosure against the back of the defences, an area where one might expect a focus for settlement or industrial activity. Not visited on the ground. T. Driver, RCAHMW,

Manorbier

My thanks to Mr J Meyrick Owen for advice and his help, also to Mr Spencer Davies and his wife, he and I used to talk at work and he would pass on information and she was always such a great help when I took Services at St Florence Church.

The parish extends from the sea on the south to the Ridgeway on the north and from Lydstep on the east to Hodgeston on the west and includes Jameston.

Has been inhabited since the Stone age, with evidence of middle stone age flint factory and Kings Quoit a Neolithic cromlech perched on the cliff of the east side of the Bay. It is capped with a massive block of stone.

From a later period Bronze Age food beakers have been found at Manorbier.

1802 Acc to Barber

On a tempestuous day, a day fraught with trouble and alarm, we left Tenby, and took the Pembroke road traced on a ridge of hills, which command extensive views over almost the whole of Pembrokeshire, and a great part of the Bristol Channel; but a heavy atmosphere frowned on the scenery and threatened a violent storm. Leaving the high road, we descended towards the sea coast in search of the gloomy remains of Manorbeer Castle and found the ruin wildly situated as described by Leland "between two little hilletes" whose rocky bases repelled the fury of an angry sea. This fortress appears to have been of Norman erection; it fell to the Crown in the reign of Henry I; a grant from James I presented it to the Bowen s of Trelogne; from them it descended by marriage into the family of Picton Castle, and in 1740 was the property of Sir Erasmus Philips, Bart. The ponderous towers and massive fragments of this Castle denote its original strength and importance to have been considerable; yet now deprived of "the pride, pomp, and circumstance of glorious war" it exhibits a scene so wild and desolate, as might disclaim all intercourse with man: rank grass clothes every projection; "the thistle shakes its lonely head" from the windows, the sea Bird screams through the Hall and adders creep where many a warrior stalked.

1839 Manorbeer (Maenor-Bŷr) Lewis

Manorbeer (MAENOR-BŷR), a parish, in the hundred of Castlemartin, union and county of Pembroke, South Wales, 4½ miles (W. S. W.) from Tenby; containing 691 inhabitants. The name of this place is of very doubtful etymology: Giraldus Cambrensis, who was born here, calls it, in his Itinerary, Maenor Pyrr, which he interprets "the mansion of Pyrrus," who, he says, also possessed the neighbouring island of Caldey. According to Sir Richard Colt Hoare, the name literally signifies "the manor of the lords," and appears to be derived from its occupation by the lords of Dyved, who were also proprietors of Caldey island. By whom the Castle was originally built has not been ascertained with any degree of accuracy; it probably owed its foundation to William de Barri, one of the Norman lords that accompanied Arnulph de Montgomery into Britain, and who married the granddaughter of Rhys ab Tewdwr, Prince of South Wales. The Castle and manor remained in the possession of that family till the 1st of Henry IV., when they were bestowed upon John de Windsor, but afterwards reverting to the crown, they were, in consideration of a large sum of money, granted by letters patent to Thomas ab Owain of Trellyn, from whose family they passed by marriage into the family of Philipps, the present owners.

Giraldus, in his notices of this place, quaintly says, "Demetia is the most beautiful, as well as the most powerful, district in Wales; Pembroke, that is the present hundred of Castlemartin, the finest province in Demetia, and the place I have described (Maenorbeer) the most delightful part of Pembroke." The parish is situated on the small bay to which it gives name in the Bristol Channel, and within two miles to the south of the turnpike-road leading from Tenby to Pembroke; the sea bounds it on the south, and in other directions it is surrounded by the parishes of Penalloy, St. Florence, and Hodgeston. It contains by admeasurement 3464 acres, of which 2855 are meadow and pasture, 450 arable, and the remainder common and waste. A great portion of the parish lies on the side of the Hill along which the main road from Tenby to Pembroke winds, and being so immediately on the coast it is almost entirely destitute of timber; but the situation of the village is singularly picturesque, and in consequence of its contiguity to the sea and the ruins of the Castle, it is much frequented by visitors. There are excellent limestone-quarries in Lydstep Bay, where a very considerable number of hands are employed, the stone being shipped during the summer months in great quantities by vessels belonging to other parts of Wales, and to North Devon: vessels of 130 tons' burthen can ride in security at Lydstep.

Coal?

Some indications of coal have been observed, but the attempts to work it have not been attended with success.

The sands on this part of the coast are fine, especially at Lydstep Haven, where they are well adapted for sea-bathing; and the beauty of its situation, and its convenient distance from Tenby, render this a favourite excursion from that wateringplace. There are two small villages in the parish, called Jamestown and Manorbeer-Newton.

The living is a discharged vicarage, rated in the King's Books at £8, endowed with £600 royal bounty and £1400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Christ's College, Cambridge, who are proprietors of the great tithes. The Church, dedicated to St. James, is an ancient structure in the Norman and early English styles of architecture, consisting of a nave and two aisles, with a lofty embattled tower. Some years ago, the accommodation was increased by the erection of a gallery, containing ninety sittings, the cost of which was in part defrayed by the Incorporated Society; the chancel, also, underwent considerable repair, at the expense of the patrons. In 1847, this gallery, which filled up the west end of the nave, was removed, and open seats of oak were substituted, at the expense of Mr. E. Wilson, of Lydstep House; who also provided means for the removal of a square sash-window at the west end, and the erection, instead, of a three-light early English window. On the south side of the Church is a large edifice, which was in all probability connected with it, but its history is unknown; it may have been a chantry or Grange, or even some distinct religious house. It has been converted into a convenient schoolroom, capable of containing from eighty to ninety children, having been presented for that purpose by the patrons; and the school is rapidly improving, chiefly through the exertions of the vicar, the Rev. Henry Hughes: it is both a day and Sunday school. There are places of worship for dissenters.

Manorbeer Castle, distinguished as the birthplace, and for some time the residence, of the celebrated Silvester Giraldu de Barri, better known as Giraldus Cambrensis, is still an object of great attraction. The remains occupy an elevated site above the small bay of Manorbeer, of which the Castle had full command. They consist principally of portions of the state apartments, whose windows faced a spacious court, the whole being inclosed with lofty embattled walls, the platforms of which are in some places still entire; the grand entrance, through a gateway flanked with two bastions, of which that on the north side has fallen down; two portcullises; and the moat, which may be distinctly traced. This Castle is perhaps the most perfect model of a Norman baron's residence now remaining in the principality, having never experienced the ravages of enemies, or suffered from modern innovations.

On Oldcastle Point, to the east of Manorbeer bay, are the remains of an ancient encampment of small dimensions, probably of Danish origin.

Giraldus Cambrensis was born about the year 1146, and was educated under his uncle, then Bishop of St Davids, who sent him to France for the completion of his studies. On his return to England he embraced holy orders, and rose rapidly to distinction in the Church; he held successively the office of legate in Wales to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the office of Archdeacon of St Davids. He was afterwards chosen Bishop of St Davids; but the King, fearing to raise to that dignity a man of such talent and influence in the principality, and one so nearly allied to the native princes, his mother having been granddaughter of Rhys ab Tewdwr, Prince of South Wales, refused to confirm his election. He attended Baldwin, Archbishop of Canterbury, on his mission to preach the crusades Throughout Wales; and, during the absence of Richard I. in the Holy Land, was one of the members of the regency. Being again denied the bishopric of St Davids, to which he had been a second time elected, and in the hope of which he had successively refused various other sees, and the archbishopric of Cashel in Ireland, he retired from public office into Wales, where he spent the last seventeen years of his life, devoted entirely to literary pursuits. He died at St Davids, at the age of seventy-four, and was interred in the cathedral Church of that place, where his monument still remains. His writings were numerous, and many of them are still extant; his Itinerary, by which he is best known, was reprinted in quarto by the late Sir, Richard Colt Hoare, with an elegant English version, accompanied by notes and a catalogue of his writings, with a reference to the several works in which they are preserved.

Manorbier acc/to Mrs Mary Mirehouse.

Fenton tells us that Manorbier Castle remained in the family of the de Barris (one of whom, William, married Angharad, daughter of Gerald de Windsor and Nesta; two of William's sons took part in the Invasion of Ireland under Strongbow in 1169) till the time of Henry IV, who granted by letters patent to John de Windsor the Manors of Manorbier, Penally, and Begelly; but they did not Long remain with him, and changed into many hands during the wars of the Roses. Queen Elizabeth granted Manorbier to Thomas ap Owen of Trefloyne; his descendant, Thomas Bowen, married a daughter of Sir Erasmus Philipps of Picton, and dying without issue, it went through her to the House of Picton. Many of the freeholders' leases in Manorbier were for a certain rent and seven red roses,' speaking thus to us of the old Lancastrian days; but the Castle ceased to be inhabited before the bitter struggle of the Parliamentary wars, thus coming down to us in more perfect preservation as an old Norman baronial residence than have some others.

The name Manor of Bere, or Pyr, is supposed by Fenton to be derived from a member of one of the oldest Welsh clans (Gwynardd), Pyr of Dywrain, or Pyr of the East; the old Welsh name for Caldy Island, Inys Pyr, points to the same. He ridicules as false the legend of the deadly struggle between a man and a bear, to which some trace the name (Man or Bear?), and which certainly sounds improbable

1848 Maenor Pyrr acc/to Rev Gilbert N Smith Gumfriedstone Rectory May 20

Descending from the Ridgeway towards the sea beyond the fourth mile-stone from Tenby, Manorbeer Castle presents a beautiful and imposing outline. Its history is the more interesting and certain, because it was the birthplace, undoubtedly the residence, of the great historian of Wales - Giraldus himself.

Giraldus Cambrensis born of the princely family of Rhys, his grandmother being no other than the celebrated Nest, wife of Giraldus de Windsor who was governor of the first Castle of Pembroke, built by Roger de Montgomery, in Henry I time. Giraldus, the historian or rather journalist – for his work is an Itinerary – was born in 1106, only forty years after the Conquest, so that the possible period in which the building of it took place (admitting it to be of Norman structure) is reduced to a very definite date. Arnulph de Montgomery, son of the above Roger, caused it to be erected.

It is difficult to decide upon the meaning of the name of the place of Giraldus' nativity, when he calls it the mansion of Pyrr, or according to his Latinity "Pyrrus". Maenor, we know, is manor, but Pyrr a word of more doubtful meaning..

Fenton mentions a British stock in Pembrokeshire, who trace themselves back to Pyr Y dwyrain or Pyr of the East. Sir R Colt Hoare derives this word, which also enters into the British name of Caldy Island, Ynys Pyrr from the plural of Por, a Lord. It was not impossible, to be sure, that Giraldus was on his Pegasus when he gave this well sounding derivation to the name of his abode. Indeed he seems conscious of it, for he asks favour for his partiality, and adds, that "Demetia is the most powerful district in Wales; Penbroch, the fittest province in Demetia; and the place he has just described "Manorbeer" the most delightful part of Penbroch". But that he had grounds for what he asserts we cannot fairly doubt.

It is certainly a very beautiful bay, and must have been more so when the "deep pond" which he describes "on the north and south sides of the Castle" was bounded by "the vineyard", on the sloping side of the Hill; and, on the right hand "a large lake" besides "between the Castle and the Church" with "the wood of very tall Hazel trees". The site of the pond is evident enough, forming that alluvial flat which extends as far as the pleasant farm-house called Tar, and to the entrance of a very pretty gorge or valley, well worth an extended stroll.

As to the site of the lake between the Castle and Church, "the lively stream" that fed it still trickles, and more than trickles along in rainy weather, though land is too valuable in our day not to be drained in such situations.

The buildings of Manorbeer Castle, as they at present exist, seem to have consisted of a large oblong court with a gatehouse at the upper end, or entrance, and the residence of the family at the lower end, next to the sea. They do not seem to have comprehended a keep, probably called; and the appearance of the whole building though manifestly capable of defense is not as strong as that of Carew or Pembroke. The character of the architecture is remarkably plain throughout; we find none of the enrichments so much admired at Carew or Caerphilly. It seems to have been constructed by the family to whom it belonged, more with a view to convenience and safety, than with any vain object of an enormous display of feudal power. Notwithstanding this, the general effect, from the variety of outline, the irregularity of plan, and the numerous contrivances for Adapting the building to the formation of the ground; are exceeding picturesque and striking.

On the western side of the approach and in advance of the ditch and gateway, are to be observed some buildings which were probably the stables, and which are pierced with numerous series of triangular holes, each formed of three stones, most probably intended to afford air. Over the foss, which may have had water in it at some time, or another was a drawbridge; and frowning above this, stood and still stands, the great gate-house,. Within the gatehouse as indeed in many other parts of the Castle, will be observed the plain pointed vaults, without ribs, which characterize nearly all the medieval buildings of South Wales. along the eastern side of the court runs minor buildings; and along the northern and western were continued the series of battlemented walls, supported on one face by a remarkable row of square projections, pierced for a passage.

In the lodging part of the Castle may be observed the great Hall in excellent preservation, with its simple vaulted roof – apartments of various kind all vaulted in the same way, connected with it; and below, on the ground floor, the vast kitchen, a gloomy place but capable of roasting oxen whole, upon occasion, and always of doing justice to the hospitable inclinations of the Lord of the domain. The circular chimney shafts, so remarkable in the cottages of the Castlemartin Hundred occur in this part of the edifice; and, if they are of the same date as the rest of it, give direct evidence as to the ancient existence of many of the cottages themselves.

The Castle of Manorbeer has its characteristics. The walls of Manorbeer leave a lasting impression of pleasure from their chaste simplicity; This will particularly strike the eye with respect to that side which faces the Church. There, the embattled wall is about 200 feet Long, and is terminated at either extremity by a tower, one of which is a round Norman structure, about twenty four feet in diameter; the other follows the pattern of all Church towers of this district, which are square and surmounted by an embattled parapet. The peculiarity of this tower, however consists in the parapet, each face of which as usual, rests upon a corbel table, being five or six times as deep as the embrasures, which gives it a very symmetrical effect, whereas the parapets of most of the Church towers are not more in general than double their depth. This tower also enlarges, or batters out at the base. The masonry of it seems as good as if built yesterday.

A sally port led out on the southern face towards the sea, and might have been of frequent use, if the water came nearer the Castle than is now the case.

There were, no doubt, external defences to this Castle upon a large Scale, but they have been so demolished that it is difficult to ascertain their precise extent and designation. Several round low flanking towers still exist in and around the walls. One round building on the opposite side of what was once the “pond” answered the purpose of a pigeon house, being pieced with pigeon holes

Throughout internally.

Manorbere* Acc to J R Cobb Arch Camb 1880

The nave of the Church is Norman, as is evidenced by the yet existing remains of a light above the most eastern nave arch on the south side, having a red stencil pattern on the jambs; and by the remains of a narrow chancel arch with stone seat facing the altar on the south side of it, existing up to 1866. The first short north transept, probably Early English, appears to have been built at the same time as the tower. It was afterwards extended as a chantry Chapel for the DeBarri, whose mailed effigy lay under the low arch at the north end until about 1780. All that remains of the first is the gable. Shortly after was the north aisle; having its own altar, rood-loft, door and Bell-cote; probably, as the Church of the people, the monks taking the rest. The south transept and the chancel had Perpendicular lights previous to 1866. The chancel is built on older foundations, probably Norman, of a very different orientation. Afterwards the nave and north aisle were lengthened, and the porch and south aisle built, and the oriel added to the Monastery.

The date of the effigy ought to be pretty well defined. The knight wears mail with goaded spurs and a sleeveless surcoat, but has small plates on the front of his crossed legs. 1325 has been named on high authority; but it is thought he should rank not very much after the Carew and Cheriton examples, - fruits of the Crusade preached by Giraldus. And the date of the buckle or mask terminating the Hood on the door in the north aisle, leading to the rood-loft by steps in the thickness of the wall, cannot be much later than 1300. Now this aisle must have been built after the chantry, as an external light of the chantry now looks into it: and the chantry was clearly built after the tower, as part of the latter is broken down to receive the former.

The tower is a good example of the corbeled Pembrokeshire vaulted tower of the class without spiral stairs. Access could only be gained by the wondrous rood-loft arrangement, or by ladder, which was probably kept on the stone crook, and drawn in on emergency. These towers are commonly put down to the time of William de Valence (1250 – 96), and the facts above stated would shew that this tower cannot be much later.

There can be no doubt but that the Norman Church and every succeeding part was plastered throughout. The ribs in the chantry Chapel are coarse rubble and the arches are simple holes in the external walls of the Norman nave. We are told by Sir George Duckett that the advowson was given by John de Barri in 1301, to the Priory at Pembroke, and this may account for the conventional buildings on the south side of the Church. The advowson now belongs to Christ College, Cambridge.

Now one can scarcely doubt that the square south-west tower of the Castle, as originally built, was contemporaneous with, if not built by the same hands as, the Church tower. It is altogether, before it was raised, similar in design, execution, and appearance, and it was built at a time when men were prodigal in building.

But it is manifestly built over the south curtain wall before the parapet was last raised, as the masonry of the tower can be seen inside the tower, and beyond; and the tower was subsequently raised, apparently in Edwardian times as will be again shewn.

The curtain wall was built over older foundations yet remaining, which range with, and appear to have formed part of, the existing Hall; and over these foundations is built the lower Chapel of crypt, then unvaulted (of probably about the same date as Giraldus' nomination to the bishopric), which again was altered and vaulted to carry the upper Chapel, which shows enrichments scarcely later than 1300.

Again, the vaults under the Hall which look Edwardian, stop up, and were demonstrably built after, a plain round headed, Norman- looking, internal doorway leading to the Hall basement; and they lower the head-way of a like external doorway having a bolt-hole 10ft deep, and no portcullis; while in the Hall itself is one circular- headed doorway stopped by a fourteenth century arch built under it, and another still leading to the stairs of access; and in the adjoining upper chamber is a small light with enormous splay as Norman- looking as it is possible to be without moulding, and a corresponding garderobe. And in the vault leading to the Watergate, also apparently Edwardian, clearly took the place of a wooden floor supported by vast beams very close together, which, with the angular- headed side door have a very early look. And these buildings, as before said, range and seem contemporaneous with the old foundations which pass under the first Chapel and under the curtain wall, which exists intact right through the square tower, which corresponds with the Church tower and which was certainly built before the chantry Chapel and the south aisle of the Church, of defined Early English work.

Moreover, the building containing the Hall has a square ponderous look, without buttresses, corresponding with Norman notions. It is approached, as usual by external stairs leading to a first floor; and there is nothing about it suggestive of a later period, - that is not an obvious insertion of addition,- while the evidence afforded by the doorways, blocked at a later but defined date, seems very clear. And it was in this building were found the twelfth century horsebone draughtman and the ecclesiastical gold ring, which had apparently been lost, and covered by rubbish, before the fire, of which there are abundant proofs, had deposited a further layer of 8ft more.

The square tower adjoining the gate-tower on the north, of which one angle has perished in a very remarkable construction. Though 40 ft high, it had only two chambers – a basement without any lights, and a first floor 20ft high with only 2 narrow oubliette entered by the round – headed arch of Long thin stones approached by external stairs, wooden floors with a wooden roof, and apparently a wooden rampart, on which men could stand to serve the crenelles. This tower and the square building at the lower end of the yard look Norman, and they are both apparently anterior to the first wall; and the first wall with circular headed gateway with portcullis (but no gate tower), with bastion tower at the north east angle, far lower than at present, and the present round tower at the south east angle clearly existed before the south west square tower was raised; and which has been before suggested as coeval with the Church tower and almost certainly before the lower Chapel of 1220 or thereabouts. The first gate tower afterwards built outside the gateway was only a vault with ramparts and slits which are now plainly visible outside and in. Afterwards were added the upper chambers; and it is these which have the corbel-table and chimney and internal fireplace, all looking Edwardian, but which are possibly Valencian.

The north-east curtain wall has been raised four times; the north-west three times. It is the last of these which carries the Edwardian bretise, and is demonstrably later than the adjacent corbel tabled buildings; and even the last have long merlons, while the covered rampart leading to the gate tower, the upper additions to the square tower and its approach, and the addition to the Hall building and the Chapel, all have heavy unrought battlements with no slits in the merlon, and it is these which give the building its present Edwardian look.

The double lancets of the round tower upper chambers appear to be alterations probably of the date of the upper Chapel, as each mullion has a piece of free-stone built in. Originally they were probably only slits like those remaining. With this exception and a renewal and subsequent alteration of the parapet, this tower exists as it was built, it is believed early in the 12 century, and as sound as when built. If fairly treated it may last another 700 years, as it shews no elements of decay whatever.

Manorbier " The Castle called Maenor Pyrr, that is, the Castle. mansion of Pyrrus, who also possessed the island of Chaldey, which the Welsh call Inys Pyrr, or the island of Pyrrus, is distant about three miles from Penbroch. It is excellently well defended by turrets and bulwarks, and is situated on the summit of a Hill extending on the western side towards the seaport, having on the northern and southern sides a fine fishpond under its walls, as conspicuous for its grand appearance as for the depth of its waters, and a beautiful orchard on the same side, enclosed on one part by a vineyard, and on the other by a wood, remarkable for the projection of its rocks and the height of its Hazel trees. On the right hand of the promontory, between the Castle and the Church, near the site of a very large lake and mill, a rivulet of never-failing water flows through a valley, rendered sandy by the violence of the winds. Towards the west, the Severn Sea, bending its course to Ireland, enters a hollow bay at some distance from the Castle Demetia, therefore, with its seven cantreds, is the most beautiful, as well as the most powerful, district of Wales; Penbroch, the finest part of the province of Demetia; and the place I have just described, the most delightful part of Penbroch. It is evident, therefore, that Maenor Pirr is the pleasantest spot in Wales; and the author may be pardoned for having thus ex- tolled his native soil, his genial territory, with a profusion of praise and admiration." So writes Gerald de Barri, known to his contemporaries as Giraldus Cambrensis. This priest, a personal friend of Henry II. and tutor to Prince John, was a critic of the Welsh Church, an upholder of the Roman tradition, a crusading missionary, and leading writer of his day (1146 to 1223). His father, William de Barri, had married Angharad, daughter of Nest and Gerald de Windsor, who brought Manorbier as dower. Probably some of the turrets and bulwarks mentioned by Giraldus are standing now; the fishpond is in part a marshy swamp, beyond which is an ancient dovecot or columbarium, orchard and vineyard are no more, but hanging woods still crown the rocks on the opposite side of the valley, where high Hazels grew in the 12th and 13th centuries. Lake and mill are gone, but the stream flows still with its never-failing supply ; and when the stranger first sees the fine storm-weathered fortress, standing rock-planted, in the quiet valley facing the Severn Sea, he will pardon Gerald for his enthusiastic admiration of his native place. Manorbier Castle consists of an oblong court surrounded by buildings. A gatehouse guards the entrance; the dwelling rooms are opposite on the seaward side of the quadrangle ; here is a ruined Chapel with fireplace having Early Gothic capitals and shafts. A flight of outside steps leads to these rooms; in the Hall a 12th century horse-bone draughtsman and an ecclesiastical gold ring were found. Many apartments are vaulted with plain groined roofs without ribs. In the court is a well, at the bottom of which some curious leaden bolts resembling clock- weights were discovered; and half-way down was an addit for concealment of smuggled goods. Hard by is a sunken fireplace to hold a cauldron; guide books tell us this was formerly used to boil up lead to provide a warm welcome for the enemy at the gate. There is no central keep, but the "Bull Tower," a circular building to the left of the entrance as one goes in, is similar in construction to Pembroke donjon, and was possibly intended for the same purpose. On the right of the entrance is a square tower with round-headed openings which some consider Norman. Curious triangular loopholes may be noticed, so shaped for the convenience of archers using the cross-bow similar loops occur in the ruins at Scotsborough, near Tenby. The gatehouse, with its portcullis, is bounded by a moat; there are many remains of outer defence.

Manorbier, the most charming of castles, has unfortunately very little personal interest beyond the fact that it was the birthplace of Giraldus Cambrensis. It remained the home of the Barris until Avicia, the widowed heiress, died without issue in 1358. This branch of the family was undistinguished in peace as in war; even the armoured knight, whose effigy is so marked a feature of the Church, is chiefly remembered as litigant in an uninteresting law-suit. When Avicia died King Edward III., as feudal Lord, granted the great estate to William de Windsor, who claimed as heir of Gerald de Windsor, but his real interest lay in the fact that he had married Alice Ferrers, King Edward's favourite. The lordship, including the Castle, was vested in the de Windsor family until Henry V.'s time, when it was taken up as Crown land. Then for a period of nearly 200 years the estate was let on leases to various tenants until Queen Elizabeth sold manor and Castle to Thomas Bowen, of Trefloyne. This property passed by marriage to the Philipps' family, and still forms part of the Picton estate. During the days of non-resident tenants the Castle fell into ruin. Leland (1538 to 1544) states in his journal that " Mansio Pirrhi is now communely cawll'd Manober. . . . The Ruines of Pirrhus Castel there; many walles yet standing hole do openly appere." It was garrisoned for the King in the Civil War without important result to either side.

The late Mr. J. R. Cobb rented the Castle from Sir Charles Philipps, excavated and cleared the rubbish from the interior of the building, and fitted up that portion adjoining the entrance as a Summer dwelling; this is now occupied by Mr. Elliott Stock.

1922 Manorbier Castle. RCAM

Acc/to Hamilton Thompsons Mil. Arch. to England, 207).

Manorbier Castle contains an interesting example of the enlargement of domestic buildings, with a solar block at either end of the Hall. The Castle stands on rising ground in a deep valley, about, half a mile from the sea. The inner ward of Castle proper is surrounded by a curtain, with a gatehouse in the east wall. The dwelling-house is upon the west side of the ward, at the end opposite the main entrance and consists of two distinct portions. The earlier consists of a first-floor and great chamber above cellars.

There was a floor above the great chamber, probably forming a bower for the ladies of the household, the Hall corresponding in height to these two upper stages. The present entrance to the Hall is in the side wall at the end next the great chamber, and was probably made, with the outer stairs against the wall, in the 13th century. The Hall with its adjacent buildings appears to be originally of the later part of the 12th century: the cellars below have semicircular barrel vaults. In the second half of the 13th century a new block of buildings was made at the opposite or south end of the Hall. It was now probably that the new entrance was made. The position of the dais seems to have been reversed, and a window in the south end wall of the Hall blocked by a fireplace. Behind this wall, and entered by a doorway in its west end, was the new great chamber, a long narrow building with its axis at right angles to that of the Hall and with a floor above. At each end of the south wall of this apartment is a passage. That at the west end passes along the line of the curtain to a tower which projects at the south-west angle of the Castle: the passage is still roofed with flat slabs on continuous corbelling, and is well lighted by loops in the curtain. The other passage, at the south-east corner of the great chamber, forms a lobby to a large Chapel which was built across the southwest angle of the ward, so that a small triangular yard was left between it and the curtain. There is a separate outer stair to the Chapel, placed, like the stair to the Hall at right Angles to the wall. The whole group of buildings, with its two outer stairs, is unexcelled for picturesqueness in any Castle".

It is somewhat strange that as important a medieval Castle, as Manorbier unquestionably is, should possess hardly any military history. It is best known to archaeologists as the birthplace of the important chronicler Giraldus Cambrensis. He describes the Castle of his youth as "- excellently well defended by turrets and bulwarks, situated on the summit of a Hill extending on the western side towards the sea, having on the northern and southern sides a fine fish-pond under its walls and a beautiful orchard on the same side, enclosed on one part by a vineyard and on the other by a wood remarkable for the projection of its rocks and the height of its Hazel trees. On the right hand of the promontory, between the Castle and the and the Church near the site of a very large lake and mill , a rivulet of never failing water flows through the valley rendered sandy by the violence of the winds". (Itinerary through Wales ed Ll Williams 1908 p 85)

Seeing that the above description was written about the year 1200, and that it pictures a state of things which existed perhaps half a century earlier, it is manifest that the present Castle of Manorbier is not that within whose walls the future arch-deacon of Brecon was born, and whose beauties he has so enthusiastically voiced. The present structure is probably not earlier than the period 1275-1325, in which case the builder must have been John de Barri, who granted the advowson of the parish Church to the priory of Monckton (Pembroke) and that of the Church of Penally to the priory of Aconbury, and whose inquisition post-mortem is dated the 17th Edw. II.

The late Mr. J. R. Cobb, who resided within the Castle for some years, and contributed an excellent article on it to Arch. Cambrensis for 1880 (IV, Id 286) has made it clear that the present Castle is largely erected upon and has incorporated within its structure an earlier building. Mr. Cobb states:

"The curtain-wall was built over older foundations yet remaining, which range with, and appear s to have formed part of, the existing Hall; and over these foundations is built the lower Chapel or crypt, then unvaulted (of probably about the same date as Giraldus' nomination to the bishopric), which again was altered and vaulted to carry the upper Chapel, which shows enrichments scarcely later than 1300.

Again, the vaults under the Hall which look Edwardian, stop up, and were demonstrably built after, a plain, round-headed, Norman-looking internal doorway leading to the Hall basement; and they a lower the headway of a like external doorway having a bolt-hole 10 feet deep and no portcullis;

while in the Hall itself is one circular-headed door stopped by a 14th century arch built under it and another still leading to the stairs of access; and in the adjoining chamber is a small light with enormous spay as Norman looking as it is possible to be without moulding and a corresponding garderobe.

And the vault leading to the Watergate, also apparently Edwardian, clearly took the place of a wooded floor supported by vast beams very close together, which, with the angular-headed side-door, have a very early look. And these buildings, as before said, range and seem contemporaneous with the old foundations which pass under the first Chapel and under the curtain-wall, which exist intact right through the square tower, which corresponds with the Church tower, and which was certainly built before the chantry, Chapel and the south aisle of the Church, of defined Early English work.

Moreover, the building containing the Hall has a square ponderous look, without buttresses corresponding with Norman notions. It is approached, as usual, by external stairs leading to the first floor; and there is nothing about it suggestive of a later period - that is, not an obvious insertion and addition - while the evidence afforded by the doorways, blocked at a later but defined date, seems very clear. And it was in this building were found the 12th-century horse bone draughtsman and the ecclesiastical gold ring, which had apparently been lost, and covered by rubbish, before the fire, of which there are abundant proofs, had deposited a further layer of 8 feet more.

The square tower adjoining the gate-tower on the north, of which one angle has perished, is a very remarkable construction. Though 40 feet high, it had only two chambers - a basement without light, and a first floor, 20 feet high, with only two narrow slits, entered by the round-headed arch of long, thin, stones, approached by external stairs, wooden floors, with a wooden roof, and apparently a wooden rampart, on which the men could stand to serve the crenelles. This tower and the square building at the lower end of the yard look Norman and have, as before shown Norman characteristics, and they are both apparently anterior to the first wall; and the first wall, with circular-headed gateway with portcullis (but no gate-tower), with bastion-tower at the north-west angle far lower than at present, and the present round tower at the south-east angle, clearly existed before the south-west square tower, before it was raised; and which has been before suggested as coeval with the Church tower, and almost certainly before the lower Chapel of 1220 or thereabouts. The first gate-tower afterwards built outside the gateway was only a vault with ramparts and slits, which are now plainly visible outside and in. Afterwards were added the upper chambers; and it is these which have the corbel-table and chimney and internal fireplace, all looking Edwardian, but which are possibly Valencian.

The north-east curtain-wall has been raised four times; the north-west, three times. It is the last of these which carries the Edwardian bêtise, and is demonstrably later than the adjacent corbel-tabled buildings; and even the last have long merlons, while the covered rampart leading to the gate-tower, while upper addition to the square tower and its approach, and the addition to the Hall building and the Chapel, all have heavy unwrought battlements with no slits in the merlon, and it is these which give the building its present Edwardian look.

With singular good fortune the external walls of Manorbier have been preserved in much of their pristine condition, but the interior buildings, especially the portions allotted to household operations, have been ruthlessly swept away to make room for similar but more convenient domestic arrangements.

The inner courtyard consists of a spacious piece of ground in shape rectangular the northern side of which is occupied by the entrance towers while the southern end is taken up by the large Chapel and some of the residential apartments. The Chapel reached from the courtyard by an external stone staircase is an oblong vaulted chamber 35ft by 17 ft. Within the Chapel and to the left of the entrance is a stoup recess. At the west end is a doorway opening on a fine apartment which was probably the Hall or an anteroom to it and a few feet away on the same side, is a stairway to rooms above. Sometime in the 16th century the Chapel became a living room; a fine fireplace was inserted about midway along the south wall, and the east window, which may have been a single lancet or, perhaps, a group of lancets, was removed, a well-proportioned Tudor window taking its place. The other lights consisted of single lancets. There are indications of colour ornament on the walls and splay of one of the windows, but no appearance of figures.'

Though history is entirely silent on the part played by the Castle during the middle ages and 17th century civil wars it is fairly certain that it was brought into condition to engage in the latter struggle; but it does not appear that it was subjected to artillery fire. Perhaps the owners or residents, whoever they were, took warning by the fate of Carew and thought discretion the better part of valour. Mr. Cobb well observes: "No other place shows what I conceive to be Parliamentary-works so plainly or on so well-defined a plan, yet there is no mention of the place being garrisoned in the papers of the time: it is to this period the lead bolts found in the well are considered to belong." It is also highly probable that the moat in front of the north entrance assumed its present appearance, following much the same method of defence as that adopted at Carew. - visited, 3rd June, 1922.

Gerald the Welshman's birthplace and favourite place still has the feel of the Middle Ages about it. The Castle is delightful, looking more like a crusader fortress than an Anglo-Norman stronghold. The bay, with its beach, sand dunes and red cliffs, is on an intimate Scale, and parts of the Church are even older than the Castle. Well worth a visit.

Acc/to Francis Jones.

Normally this building, which is mainly a ruin, would not be within the scope of this work but as parts of it have been restored to make it once again a family home then it qualifies on these grounds for inclusion.

Fenton described Manorbier as 'the most perfect residence of an old Norman who is said to have founded Manor with all its appendages; Church, mill, dove-house, ponds, park and grove, still to be traced'.

It looks today much as depicted by Samuel and Nathaniel Buck in 1740. Nothing much has been added to the building since about 1300 except making part of it habitable again. The birthplace the Giraldus de Barri (c. 1146 c. 1220), otherwise known as Giraldus Cambrensis or, more popularly, Gerald of Wales. Gerald was a grandson of Odo de Barri, a bier. His father, William de Barri, married Angharad, daughter of another Norman, Gerald de Windsor and grand-daughter of Rhys ap Tewdwr (d. 1093), Prince of South Wales.

Gerald wrote (inter alia) The journey through Wales and The Description of Wales. Both these, written in Latin, are very readable in the late Professor Lewis Thorpe's translation.

Gerald waxes lyrical when describing his birthplace with lavish praise.

The de Barri family and their descendants occupied Manorbier for about 200 years, their connexion ending in 1399 when the Castle and lands were confiscated by Henry IV. Thereafter the Castle changed hands several times but by the late 1530's it was already in ruins with no one living there. Cromwell's soldiers seized Manorbier in the Civil War but it was not slighted or besieged. The Castle does not have a keep and is built around a large courtyard with a surviving round tower and a gatehouse.

Lady Dunsany lived here for a number of years.

Manorbier Castle

Manorbier is an early twelfth century and later Castle with substantial stone buildings erected before 1200. The site was largely rebuilt in stone in the thirteenth and early fourteenth centuries, and re-fortified in the seventeenth. The surviving remains consist of an inner enclosure, about 76m by 44m, and an outer, about 100m by 76m, laid out along an east-west inland promontory above the confluence of two streams.

Commanding a quiet, wooded valley with a view of the sea beyond, Manorbier is one of the most secluded and beautiful castles in Pembrokeshire. It is famous as the birthplace, in 1147, of Giraldus Cambrensis, who accompanied Archbishop Baldwin on a tour of Wales in 1188 to recruit for the Third Crusade. His oft-quoted writings on Manorbier describe it as 'the pleasantest spot in Wales' and provide a vivid sense of the surroundings of the Castle in its heyday. He wrote: 'The Castle is excellently well defended by turrets and bulwarks, having on its northern and southern sides a fine fish pond under its wall, and a beautiful orchard on the same side, enclosed on one part by a vineyard and on the other by a wood'. Unlike many of the more austere and ruinous Pembrokeshire castles, Manorbier contains a range of well preserved domestic and farm buildings thought to date to the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Two of the towers of the old Castle were brought into habitation during the late nineteenth century by the owner, J R Cobb, through the provision of roofs and floors.

Manorbier Castle Dovecote; Old Pigeon House

Probably 12th-13th century. Rubble. Dormed roof. Central opening. Approx. 240 holes. Estimates of date vary from the above to the 16th century.

The dovecote stands about 120m north-west of Manorbier Castle on south-east facing slopes above the site of a fishpond, in the area of an orchard mentioned in the late 12th century RCAHMW

Manorbier Mill

The Manorbier Mill existing now lies to the west of the Castle, where an earth dam impounded the waters of a small stream flowing from the north-east. It may be the mill mentioned in 1669, but does not appear to be the mill mentioned by Gerald of Wales (1188), which would seem to have lain south of the Castle.

The small corn mill, about 10.5 by 4.5 metres in plan, was built into the earth dam, which has been breached so that water flows away from the mill. The local limestone rubble walls have been restored, but the building is roofless. There is a later lean-to extension on the south-west side. The internal wheelpit, 2.4 metres wide, is at the north-west end of the building and is thought to have contained an overshot wheel fed by a wooden launder passing through the north-east wall; there is an opening for the tailrace in the south-west wall. The wheel probably drove two pairs of stones, but only fragments have been found.

Manorbier Castle, Garden, Manorbier

Park, grounds and gardens associated with Manorbier Castle .

Gerald of Wales' brief description of the Castle environs allow the late twelfth century contrived landscape to be reconstructed in some detail.

The relevant passages, from the Journey through Wales (12) are:

" ... having ... a fine fishpond under its walls, as conspicuous for its grand appearance as for the depth of its waters, and a beautiful orchard on the same side, inclosed on one part by a vinyard, and on the other by a wood, remarkable for the projection of its rocks & the height of its Hazel trees.... between the Castle & the Church, near the site of a very large lake & mill, a rivulet of never-failing water flows through a valley"

The features mentioned are: the fishpond north-west of the Castle; an orchard on the same side as the fishpond, flanked by a Hazel grove and vineyard; a large lake and mill, possibly south of the Castle. The fishpond dam appears to have followed the alignment of the Castle's south-east wall and the orchard is likely to have occupied the south-east facing slopes above its further shore, in the area of the present dovecote, which is presumably later. The steep promontory slopes south of the dovecote would best suit the description given of the Hazel grove, so that the vineyard should have lain to the north and north-east.

If the large lake and mill were south of the Castle the effect produced would have been not unlike that at Pembroke with water either side of a peninsular Castle. There are other echoes of Pembroke Castle in the domed round tower and the provision of a large towered outer court. West and north-west of the Castle, beyond the fishpond, orchard and vineyard, was a walled park probably about 1.0km north to south, bounded by a current road on the north and extending about 1.0km to the west, tapering as it does so. Park Farm may lie on the site of a former lodge.

The Parish Church Manorbier

The Church consists of the following: chancel (28 feet by 17) north transept (22 feet by 11 feet), south transept (19 feet by 15 feet) Nave (68 feet by 15 feet), north aisle (58 feet by 15 feet), south aisle, a lean-to (52 feet by 7 feet), tower on north side (15 feet square), south porch (8 feet by 8ft).

The edifice is placed near the top of a steep Hill about 200 feet above the bottom level of the valley which separates it from the medieval Castle on the opposite slope, a small strip of level ground having doubtless been widened to accommodate the edifice.

The oldest part of the Church is the nave and a single small round headed light above the present south arcade, shows that this original Church dates from Norman period, probably mid 12c., the window is the only remaining one of what was probably a row of small lights that were placed high up in the exterior walls to catch as much of the daylight as possible. The Norman Church may have consisted of chancel, transepts and nave of which the nave alone remains. About a century later the chancel and transepts were rebuilt and within another generation or two the north transept was clumsily enlarged to accommodate the tomb of one of the lords of the Castle, usually supposed to have been John de Barri, who died c. 1324. It is also probable that the north aisle was added about the same period. The Norman windows in the south wall must have kept that side of the nave very dark, so that shortly after the burial of de Barri in the lengthened transept, it was determined to build a lean-to aisle to the nave by cutting a series of low arches in what had hitherto been the exterior south wall of the building; thus, by putting larger windows into the low wall of the new aisle, the original Norman lights became as it were a clear story to the enlarged building. The transepts are really side or mortuary Chapels, and the aisles open upon them in a clumsy fashion. There is a squint from the south transept to the chancel. The comparatively small base measurement of the tower (15+ feet square), proportionately to its height, points to an earlier and less imposing feature than usually marks the ordinary 13th- century Church of the county, and it is possible that had space permitted the course followed in the enlargement of Lawhaden Church a more massive tower would have been erected at Manorbier. But at the latter, with the tower on the side sloping to the valley the ground would not admit of such enlargement, and it is probable that the original tower has had to do duty, through all restorations of Church, upon its original site, and within its original dimensions. It is placed at the angle made by chancel and north transept. There are two fonts, one probably coeval with the Norman Church, the other a plain octagonal basin (on a modern pillar), which may have been originally intended for less honourable uses.

Originates from Norman times with the Nave being the oldest part now standing. About 1250 the chancel and transepts were rebuilt, the chancel on a much older foundation but was greatly altered when the Church was restored in 1865. Tower 1270. Barry Chapel added in 14c.

Giraldus Cambrensis, Gerald de Barri born 1146 or 1147 in Manorbier Castle records in his autobiography that as a boy (in 1153) he asked to be taken to the Church for safety during a fierce attack by the Welsh Princes on Tenby.

"The parish Church is that to which Giraldus aged 7 asked to be taken when the Welsh raided Tenby".

Steps lead down into it through a vaulted porch (note the medieval painting) as into a crypt. The huge walls of the Norman nave have been carved out, or so it seems, to form arcades to the fourteenth century aisles. The uninhibited intersections of the transept vaults cut the main vault of the nave at different levels. The sculptural character of the Church must have been even stronger before the 1865 restoration [F Wehnert] when a much larger arch was cut in the chancel wall. Then the old rood screen and the Royal Arms were removed and the perpendicular east window changed for the present three light window. The tower has an unusual position in the angle between the chancel [rebuilt in the 13c] and the north transept. It was originally reached only by a ladder.

St James's Church; St Martin's Church, Manorbier

Earliest surviving fabric is the C12 nave. Building greatly enlarged during C12-C13. Major restoration undertaken in 1865-8. Limestone rubble masonry with some local sandstone, and slate roofs. Comprises an aisled nave, chancel, N and S transepts, and tower. 4-storey tower with crenellated parapet and three large belfry lights. Retains a valuable series of stone vaults, including those to the nave and the chantry Chapel. A C14 de Barri effigy is now located in the chancel, having been moved from the Chapel. Medieval ceiling paintings survive in the porch.

Remains of Buildings in Churchyard.

Manorbier Church was granted to the priory Monkton at Pembroke by Sir John de Barri in 1301 and a Grange was established here, of which a few cottages are doubtless the survivors.

According to the census of religious buildings 1851 the parish had acreage of 3,493 acres and a total population of 698 of which 317 were male and 381 female.

The average congregations were given as 240 which meant that every seat in the Church was full. The accommodation had recently been augmented by the erection of a gallery and there was one service a Sunday but the incumbent was not resident.

PARISH OF MANORBEER.—Village School.

On the 22nd of December I visited the above school—it was held in a school-room near the Church. The room was very substantially built. The money was raised in part at a bazaar, and in part from the Vicar and landowners in the parish. The room is lighted by three glazed windows. The furniture consisted of desks round the room on the national system—one desk for the master, and one large one in the middle of the room, with benches, all in very good repair. The building was lofty, ceiled, and well ventilated. There was a comfortable fire in the room. The master was an intelligent man. He had been a tailor, but from ill health had been obliged to change his occupation. I heard the children read the second chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel—five of the class (which was composed chiefly of girls) read very well, and four others not at all ill. They answered my questions in Scripture history readily, and the answers in mental arithmetic, by one boy in particular, were very good; three could repeat their Catechism pretty well, but did not seem to understand what they were repeating. One of them said that his neighbour" as his father and mother. Could not tell what two things were to be learnt from the Ten Commandments. There were six learning to Read and spell from Vyse's and Mavor's spelling-books, and three more in letters and monosyllables, which, with the eleven who read to me in the Testament, constituted the number present at the time of my visit. Labourers' wages in this parish averaged 7s. per week on their own finding; they were in general a sober and industrious class of men. There were two Dissenting Chapels in the parish, one a Primitive-Methodist at Jameston and an Independent at Manorbeer-Newton, but no Sunday-school held in either.

David Lewis,

Jameston School—on the 22nd of December I visited the above school. It was held in a room, part of a dwelling-house and lighted by one small glazed window about 10 inches square The furniture consisted of three small tables eight chairs, and two low benches. There was a culm fire in the room, and the steam arising from it when I entered was almost intolerable I examined some copy-books, and the writing, for children so young and with so few advantages was very Fair. Five children read the 2nd chapter of Deuteronomy. One (a little girl) read pretty well; but all the boys very ill. The children were excessively ignorant rude, and ill-behaved. I could scarcely get a question answered. Knew who made the world - Did not know who Jesus Christ was. Had never heard of the Virgin Mary . Did not know how many Apostles there were. Had never heard of our Saviour coming on earth. The master here remarked that "it is something like remarkable that you reads, and hears sermons, and don't recollect nothing that you sees or hears".

David Lewis, Assistant.

1488 12 February

Henry etc. to H. Bishop of St Davids, greeting:

we command you that you do not for any liberty omit to enter and cause to be Levied for us of goods, benefices, and ecclesiastical possessions, of the underwritten churches in your diocese the sums written by parcels below, namely, of the Church of Manorbier 40s.;

of the tenth and moiety of a tenth granted to Sir Edward IV late King of England by the Clergy of the province of Canterbury, in the fourteenth year of his reign in the archdeaconry of St Davids.

And have there then this writ. Witness W. Hody, knight, at Westminster, 12 February in the third year of our reign.

By the Great Roll of the first year of Richard III, in Hereford, and by the Barons.

1489 5 January

On 5 January in the year above, at Lamphey by the Rev. father aforesaid, Sir John Dier chaplain, was admitted to the vacant Church of Manorbier.

1490 10 July

On 10 July in the year and place above said (Lamphey) he admitted one Sir Phillip ap Ieuan chaplain, to the perpetual vicarage of the parish Church of St Martin Manorbier and instituted him in the same etc. then vacant by the resignation of Sir John Dyer last vicar there.

1603 – 25

John Marychurch of Manorbier was cited in the Star Chamber along with his Uncle Sir William Wogan of Wiston and his brothers in law Nicholas and Thomas Adams as defendants in a case of forcible imprisonment of John Master gentleman at Tenby.

1620's John Gwyther of Manorbier was said to have harboured a Catholic Priest.

1631 William Richards was the cleric at Manorbier -- he died there in 1675. The income of the Vicar was £8 per annum and he was regarded as comfortably off compared with many.

1678 The parsonage at Manorbier was regarded as being out of repair.

1721 Thomas Athoe was mayor of Tenby and was later hanged for murdering his nephew.

"Journeying home to Manorbier one night from a troublesome day at the Market in Tenby he murdered his nephew".

There had been family rivalry for a while and the dark and narrow bridge over the Ritec was too good an opportunity for settling the quarrel. His trial and execution brought a certain notoriety to the town as he was found innocent by a court in Pembroke and it took the Court of the Kings Bench in Westminster and a New Act of Parliament ordaining "that all murders or robberies committed in, on or about the borders of Wales should be triable in any county in England" to finally bring him to justice.

1762 a yeoman from Manorbier parish appeared before the Great Sessions of Pembrokeshire for stealing from the sloop "Two Partners" wrecked in Lydstep Bay, the property of Llewelin Evan, mariner, of Newport parish.

1804 April - 47 ankers of Brandy were seized at Manorbier by the Tide-surveyor of Tenby and his crew.

1811 July Rev Sir Thomas Gery Cullum Bart in his diary, records - "of late years the Castle (of Manorbier) has been appropriated to smuggling, on a most daring Scale. The person concerned having hired the Castle of the farmer, and having built a house contiguous, used to fill the subterranean apartments and towers with spirits. A number of casks were soon discovered floating in the reservoir. At last, after several seizures, this illicit trade was put a stop to by Lord Cawdor, who was nearly killed in the attempt."

Giraldus Cambrensis Gerald de Barri

generally called Cambrensis, was descended from an illustrious lineage, being the fourth son of de Barri William, by Angharad daughter of Nest daughter of Rhys ab Tewdwr, prince of South Wales. He was born in the year 1146, at the Castle of Maenor Pyr, in Pembrokeshire, and at an early age he showed such indications of literary talent and religious feeling, that his father determined to educate him for the Church, and his uncle, David FitzGerald, then Bishop of St David's undertook the charge. He continued under his care until his twentieth year, when he went to Paris, and remained there for three years, giving lectures on rhetoric and the belles lettres, and being pointed out by the doctors of the university as a pattern to the young men of his age. On returning to England about 1172, he entered holy orders, and soon obtained preferment, being appointed a Canon of Hereford, and rector of Chesterton, in Oxfordshire but his love for his native country induced him to settle in Wales, where he distinguished himself by his zeal for the Church, and detected several abuses which prevailed in the diocese of St David's. Having stated his complaints to the archbishop of Canterbury, he was by him appointed his legate in Wales for the purpose of rectifying abuses. The archdeacon of Brecon having been deprived for his immorality, Giraldus was appointed to that archdeaconry, and on the death of his uncle, the Canons of St David's elected Giraldus to succeed him, which the King objected to with this high encomium, "that it was neither expedient nor necessary to elect too upright or active a man to the vacant see of St David's, as such a choice might prove detrimental to the cathedral Church of Canterbury, or even to the crown of England." Giraldus then returned to Paris, where he distinguished himself by his eloquent declamation in the schools, and was offered the professorship of Canon Law in that university. After a residence of some duration he returned to Wales, and found the diocese of St David's in great confusion, and the Bishop, Peter de Leia, compelled to leave his episcopal residence, owing to disputes which had arisen between him and the Welsh, upon this he was appointed administrator of the diocese. In 1185, he was selected by King Henry to be the preceptor of his son John, whom he accompanied to Ireland as secretary, and he was offered the bishoprics of Ferns and Leighlin, which he refused, as he did the archbishopric of Cashel, at a subsequent period. During his residence in Ireland, he was diligent in collecting materials for his two works, the Topography and Conquest of Ireland, which he completed after his return to Wales. In 1187, he accompanied Baldwin, in the celebrated tour through Wales, for the preaching of the Crusade, the most interesting result of which is to be found in his Itinerary, describing the country he traversed, and containing much interesting information respecting the manners of the Welsh, in that age. In 1189, Giraldus attended Henry to France, and on his return to England after the death of that Monarch, he was deputed to regulate matters in Wales, where some disturbances had occurred, and King Richard appointed him coadjutor to William de Longchamp, in the regency of the Kingdom, on his departure to the holy land Giraldus was next offered the bishoprics of Bangor and Llandaff, both of which he declined.

He next resided at Lincoln for six years, where he devoted himself to the study of theology, and here wrote several of his works. In 1198, on the death of Peter de Leia, he was again elected by the chapter of St David's but the jealousy of the archbishop of Canterbury prevented his obtaining the favourite aim of his whole life. Not willing to yield without a struggle, he went to Rome, and for five years he withstood the encroachment of the archbishop, failing however of success, he passed the remainder of his life in revising his numerous works, and when the bishopric was offered to him on dishonourable terms in 1215, he refused it, and he ended his distinguished career in 1220, at the age of 74, and was buried in the cathedral. In whatever point of view we examine the character of this extraordinary man, whether as a scholar, a patriot, or a divine, he may justly be considered as one of the brightest luminaries of the twelfth century. A catalogue of his works has been preserved, as drawn up by himself, but it is not complete, it contains nineteen different works

- 1, Chronographia et Cosmographia Metrica

In addition to these, it appears that he wrote also the Life of Henry II

Acts of King John, an English Chronicle,

the Praises of Wales, and a metrical Epitome of his Cambrian Topography, besides several others of inferior interest His works relating to Ireland were published by Camden, at Frankfort, in 1602, and those having reference to Wales by Dr Powell, in 1585, and by WHarton, in his "Anglia Sacra," where may likewise be found his book "De Gestis Giraldi" The most valuable edition is that by Sir Richard Hoare, London, 1806, who also published a translation with notes in two splendid volumes in the same year This contains also a full memoir of his life, and an ample account of his works and the places where the different manuscripts are deposited Eminent Welshmen –R Williams 1852

The Description of Wales

His first stay in France seems to have lasted till 1174, he then returned to Britain and was immediately given livings in England and Wales According to W L Williams he held the livings of Llanwnda, Tenby and Angle and afterwards the prebend of Mathry, the living of Chesterton in Oxfordshire, was also prebendary of Hereford, Canon of St David's and in 1175, when only 28 years old became Archdeacon of Brecon.

"We crossed the River Tywi in a boat and travelled to Carmarthen, leaving Llanstephan and Laugharne on the rocks by the seashore on our left These were the two castles which Rhys ap Gruffydd took by assault after the death of Henry II, the garrisons being forced to capitulate Rhys then ravaged the provinces of Pembroke and Rhos with fire and sword, completely devastating the whole neighbourhood and besieged Carmarthen, but failed to take it" Immediately after the death of Henry II in July 1189, Rhys ap Gruffydd attacked and captured the two castles of Laugharne and Llanstephan, ravaged Pembroke and Rhos and besieged Carmarthen, Gerald had been sent home from Normandy by Richard I to promote peace in Wales According to him he had some success.

Roman Carmarthen

Carmarthen is the site of a Hill fort of the Demetae known by the latinised Celtic name of Maridunum

Under the Romans it was an important centre where many roads met [In Gerald's day part of the Roman walls was still standing]

p140

"When we were travelling from Carmarthen to the Cistercian Monastery called Whitland Whitland Abbey had been moved from Little Trefgarn near Haverfordwest C1151 the Archbishop was told by messengers of how a young Welsh, man, who was coming to meet him in all devotion , had been murdered on the way by his enemies He turned aside from the road, ordered the bloody corpse to be wrapped in his almoners cloak and with pious supplication commended the soul of the murdered youth to heaven The next day twelve archers from the nearby Castle of St Clears, who had killed the young man, were signed with the Cross in Whitland as a punishment for their crime"

p141

"The folk who live in the neighbourhood came from Flanders, for they had been sent there by Henry I to colonize the district" [The Flemings seem to have come at various times, in 1105, 1107 and 1111] "They are a brave and robust people but very hostile to the Welsh, and in a perpetual state of conflict with them They are highly skilled in the wool trade, ready to work hard and face danger by land or sea in the pursuit of gain, and, as time and opportunity offer, prompt to turn their hand to the sword or the ploughshare"

p145

"A strange habit of these Flemings is that they boil the right shoulder blades of rams, but not roast them, strip off all the meat and, by examining them, foretell the future and reveal the secret of events Long past"

p147

"The province of Pembroke comes next after Rhos, lying towards the south and by the sea, indeed, a branch of the sea divides the two Its main town, also called Pembroke, is the capital of Dyved It is built high up on an oblong plateau of rock, and it extends along the north and the south of an inlet of the sea which runs down from Milford Haven. Hence it's name Pembroke, which means the head of the estuary"

"de Montgomery Arnulf was the first to build a fortification here, from wooden stakes and turf, in the days of Henry I, King of the English" Arnulf de Montgomery, younger son of Roger de Montgomery, Earl of Shrewsbury, built his first fortress at Pembroke c1091, in the reign of William Rufus It was not very strong and it offered little resistance When he went back to England, Arnulf left the fortress and a small garrison in the charge of de Windsor Gerald, a stalwart cunning man, who was his constable and lieutenant. Grandfather of Gerald of Wales

"without more ado the inhabitants of South Wales began to lay siege to the place" This was the uprising of 1096 The Welsh, leaders of the attack on Pembroke were ab Edwin Uchtryd and ap GronwHywel They had just lost their prince, Rhys ap Tewdwr, a warlike leader, who had been betrayed by his own troops in Brecknockshire, and they were left with his son Gruffydd, who was still a boy; ap Tewdwr Rhys was killed near Brecon in April 1093

Under cover of darkness 15 Knights deserted the fortress in desperation, clambered into a boat and tried to escape over the water The very next morning Gerald transferred their estates to 15 of their own men-at-arms, dubbing them there and then as Knights The siege lasted a Long time, and those inside were greatly reduced and near the end of their tether When they had hardly any provisions left, Gerald, who, as I have said was a cunning man created the impression that they were still well supplied and expecting reinforcements at any moment For he took four hogs, which were all that they had, cut them into sections and hurled them over the palisade at the besiegers The following day he thought of an even more ingenious stratagem He signed a letter with his own seal and had it placed just outside the lodging of Wilfred, Bishop of St David's who chanced to be in the neighbourhood This was at Llamphey, two miles away Wilfred seems to have been Bishop of St David's from c1083 onwards There it would be picked up almost immediately, and the finder would imagine that it had been dropped accidentally by one of Gerald's messengers The purport of the letter was that the constable would have no need of reinforcements from Arnulf for a good four months When this dispatch was read, to the Welsh, , they immediately abandoned the siege and went off home"

The next thing Gerald did was to marry Nest the sister of Gruffydd, Prince of South Wales, with the object of giving himself and his troops a firmer foothold in the country he married her c1100, [she was the maternal grandmother of Gerald of Wales]. In the process of time she bore Gerald de Windsor a large number of children, both boys and girls. With the help of this family the sea coast of South Wales was held secure by the English and Ireland too, was stormed, as is narrated in my "Vaticinal History" The Conquest of Ireland"

"Only about 3 miles from Pembroke Castle is the fortified mansion known as Manorbier, that is the house of one Pyrrus The same man also owned Caldy Island, called by the Welsh, Ynys Byr, which means the Island of Pyrrus There the house stands, visible from afar because of its turrets and crenellations, on the top of a Hill which is quite near the sea and which on the western side reaches as far as the harbour To the north and north-west, just beneath the walls there is an excellent fish pond, well constructed and remarkable for its deep waters On the same side there is a most attractive orchard, shut in between the fish pond and a grove oftrees, with a great crag of rock and Hazel nut trees which grow to a great height At the east end of the fortified promontary, between the Castle, if I may call it such, and the Church, a stream of water which never fails winds its way along a valley, which is strewn with sand by the strong sea winds It runs from a large lake, and there is a water mill on its bank To the west it is washed by a winding inlet of the Severn Sea which forms a bay quite near the Castle and yet looks out toward the Irish Sea If only the rocky headland to the south bent round northwards a little farther, it would make a harbour most convenient for shipping Boats on their way to Ireland from almost any part of Britain scud by before the east wind, and from this vantage point you can see them brave the ever changing violence of the winds and the blind fury of the waters This is a region rich in wheat, with fish from the sea and plenty of wine for sale What is more important than all the rest is that, from its nearness to Ireland, heaven's breath smells so wooingly there

Of all the different parts of Wales, Dyved, with its seven cantrefs, is at once the most beautiful and the most productive

Of all Dyved, the province of Pembroke is the most attractive, and in all Pembroke the spot which I have just described is most assuredly withoutits equal It follows that in all the broad lands of Wales Manorbier is the most pleasant place by far You will not be surprised to hear me lavish such praise upon it, when I tell you that this is where my own family came from, This is where I myself was born I can only ask you to forgive me "

p156

Henry II arrived in Pembroke on 21st September 1171 on his way to Ireland. He was delayed by contrary winds for nearly a month

p167

The King Henry II had left the following garrisons behind him in Ireland, in Dublin, de Lacy Hugh assassinated in 1186 to whom he had given Meath in fee, with twenty Knights to support him, FitzStephen Robert — Robert FitzStephen was the son of the Princess Nest by Stephen, constable of Cardigan, and thus an uncle of Gerald and FitzGerald Maurice — Maurice FitzGerald was the son of the Princess Nest by her Husband, Gerald of Windsor and thus both a half brother of Robert FitzStephen and an uncle of Gerald together with twenty more Knights

p189

"Two great noblemen were sent to the island Anglesey by the King Henry II They were my own uncles,

Henry, son of Henry I and Uncle of Henry II, the child of Nest, the noble born daughter of Rhys ap Tewdwr, Prince of Dyved in South Wales, and Henry behaved far too rashly and, with no support from his troops, fell in the first line of battle, pierced by a number of spears, to the great grief of his soldiers and FitzStephen Robert, Henry's brother, but by a different father Robert was a man who, in our own time, led where others followed, for it was he who soon afterwards invaded Ireland I have recorded his deeds in my "Vaticinal History" Robert was badly wounded and escaped with great difficulty to his ships, abandoning all hope of defence "

p253

" Long before the fall of Britain, the Welsh, were instructed and confirmed in the Christian Faith by Faganus and Duvainus who at the request of King Lucius, were sent to the island by Pope Eleutherius

Later on, Germanus of Auxerre and Lupus of Troyes were sent over because of the corruption which had gradually resulted from the invasion of the pagan Saxons and more especially to put an end to the Pelagian heresy, but they found nothing heretical or contrary to the articles of true Faith" Gerald's references are Bede "Historia Ecclesiastica" 14, I17 and Geffrey of Monmouth, "The History of the Kings of England" IV19, VI13

Having received their order of 15th June 1652 concerning the regulating of Markets, enclosed in a letter from Mr Blackgrave, the writers caused it to be published at the public sessions holden for Pembroke at the town Hall of Pembroke on 5 October They made known such fit places within the county where Markets may be directed, viz , Mounton in the hundred of Castlemartyn on Tuesday, Fishguard in Kemes on Wednesday, Lawhadden in Dungledy on Thursday, St Florence in CasteMartyn on Thursday, and Narberth in the hundred of Narberth on Wednesday The reason of their certificate herein is that there is no Market in the county but in the corporate towns of Pembroke and Tenby and the county town of Haverfordwest Calender of the Records of the borough of Haverfordwest 1539 – 1660

Marychurch of Norchard Manorbier

Just south of The Ridgeway, and north of Lydstep Formerly a commodious residence of an ancient landowning family, built over a continuous vault It is now a farmhouse The earliest residence of which we have any record was that of Looney, also spelled as Lymy and Lang

Looney Thomas , left no sons and Norchard passed to his daughter and heiress

Looney Isabel who married

Marychurch Lawrence 1400 who settled at his wife's home Between 1400 and 1600, eleven generations of his descendants lived at Norchard The origin of the family is unknown, and the name was often rendered as St Marychurch by Dwnn Five of the name served as Mayors of Tenby in the period 1501-1526. When Dwnn recorded the pedigree and arms on 10 November 1591,

Marychurch John 10 November 1591 signed, and gave five shillings to the herald for his travail

The family remained at Norchard until the latter half of the 19th century. In 1670

Marychurch William 1670 was assessed at seven hearths for Norchard, and

Marychurch Maud 1670 one hearth

Marychurch Francis 1670 one hearth apiece The male line seems to have failed shortly afterwards, and when

Marychurch Mary 1673 ,married Williams John of Gumfreston, and Pant Howel Carms, who then settled at Norchard which passed to Mary's descendants Williams Mary nee Marychurch had two daughters who married two brothers –

Williams Mary to Meyrick John d 1732, and

Williams Alice who married Meyrick Francis d 1741

In 1786 Norchard was owned by Meyrick John esq. of Bush, with Nicholas Roch as tenant

Mining Manorbier Manorbier Iron Mine

Cromlech Acc/to Rev Gilbert N Smith

Climbing the rock on the left hand side away from the Castle about high water Mark, a narrow path conducts us to a cromlech situated near the verge of the cliff. This memorial of as distant era has three supports, from one of which it has slipped, and now inclines to the south. The supported stone is about nineteen feet Long and sixteen broad.

1865 Acc to Arch Camb

On the south eastern side of the little cove at Manorbeer, opposite to the Castle, and about half a mile southwest from the Church, is to be seen the cromlech which has already been noticed in our Journal, but is now more accurately delineated. It is curious from its position, because instead of lying on an elevated or bare piece of ground, it is just under a ridge of rocks, as if placed there for greater concealment. In this respect it resembles the cromlech near Llanwnda, on Pen Caer. The cause in each of these cases has, no doubt, been the convenience of using large slabs from the adjoining, or rather overhanging, cliffs by sliding and propelling them downwards instead of transporting them to a distance. The interment of the chieftan, in each instance was probably so far influenced by the nature of the locality; and it may be imagined that each of these cromlechs was raised for receiving the remains of someone who had fallen, in a foray of raid, very near to the spot itself. Perhaps some leader of predatory bands landing from vessels to sack and destroy; perhaps some native chief killed while resisting an incursion of this kind, may here have been laid to rest. Both at Manorbeer and Llanwnda the cap stone has evidently been removed only a short distance from its original site, particularly in the former instance; where its present position might be deemed accidental, were it not for the supporters being placed transversely, evidencing the intervention of manual force. Enveloping carneddau can hardly be said to have existed in either case; because, first of all, there is no trace of any carnedd properly so called; nor can we well conceive the stones, if there had been one, to have been removed for any building purposes, when all around the whole region constitutes a quarry of stony fragments of every size and shape. The sepulchral chamber was no doubt, made secure in some way of other; and each of these cromlechs deserves special attention to verify this point.

The singular beauty and romantic wildness of the little bay at Manorbeer is another distinguishing “accidental” of this cromlech; while not far above it, in the Hill, opens one of those yawning chasms going right down through the vertical strata to the sea beneath, which are some of the most remarkable features of the district

RCAM The King's Quoit.

This cromlech stands on the extreme verge of Manorbier Bay about half a mile southwest of the medieval Castle. The Capstone has an overall length of 15 ft breadth of 9 ft and thickness varying from 1 1/2 ft to 2 ft; it originally rested upon three short supports but one has fallen beneath it. Adjoining and above the capstone is a ledge of limestone similar to it; to which in all probability the capstone once belonged.

King's Quoit, Burial Chamber

Neolithic -An earthfast capstone, 4.0m by 2.5m and 0.5m thick, is supported by upright slabs to the N and W, another, to the E, having fallen. The capstone is thought to have been derived from a neighbouring outcrop of upright slabs.
